'Benedict XV. God's Messenger to Restore Peace,' Says Cardinal O'Connell

PRESIDENT CALLS FOR WAR TAX

CARDINAL PRAISES NEW POPE

ROME, Sept. 4.—Cardinal O'Connell of Boston today sent the following message to the people of the United States through the AMERICAN:

I have known the new Pope for twenty years, or since he was under secretary of state and I was rector at the American College. In our daily intercourse at the Vatican I had an opportunity to admire his great ability. Although young, he has had extraordinary experience. He was fortunate in being educated under Pope Leo XIII. and Cardinal Rampolla.

God has surely shown his infinite mercy by sending to us in these trying days, a young, able, energetic pontiff, who knows the needs of the church and combines the best qualities of a priest with those of a diplomat. It is just what is needed at a time when the world, though clamoring for peace, must witness the grim spectacle of war.

Benedict XV. ascends the throne of St. Peter in the midst of the din of battle, and he will be God's messenger in restoring order and peace amongst the tried nations.

Clad in full pontifical robes, Pope Benedict XV. today received in audience the cardinals who yesterday elevated him to the throne of St. Peter.

Though the shadow of the great war has hung low over the cardinals since they arrived here for the conclave, none of the stately ceremonial incident to the first audience of a new Pope was omitted today. The cardinals filing before the new pontifex kissed his hand and foot.

Each cardinal was in turn embraced by the Pope, who whispered comforting words to Cardinal Mercier, the Belgian prelate. Cardinal Mercier was in tears as he approached the throne, but as he turned away there was a smile on his face, the first that has shown since he arrived from Belgium. As soon as the coronation ceremonies are concluded on Tuesday the cardinal will return to his war-torn country.

CONGRESS APPLAUDS PRESIDENT'S APPEAL

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—In the presence of crowded galleries and practically a full attendance of the two Houses, President Wilson today read his message before a joint session of the Senate and House, held in the House chamber, advocating emergency revenue legislation to replace the losses caused by decreasing customs duties during the European war period.

Although this was the seventh time that the President had personally read a message to Congress, interest in the event was undiminished and the customary crowd struggled for admission to the gallery. Admission, however, was by card only.

The President reached the House wing of the Capitol at 12:25 o'clock and entered the House chamber at 12:28 o'clock. He was wildly applauded. The President was escorted into the chamber by Senators Kern, Clarke and Gallinger and Represen-

PARIS REPORTS GREAT VICTORY FOR THE ALLIES

Official reports from Paris announce that the allies have repulsed the Germans. The news first came in the following dispatch:

PARIS (2 p. m.)—The allies are successfully repulsing the Germans. The advance on Paris is stopped.

Almost simultaneously came the following dispatch from the German capital:

BERLIN, Sept. 4.—An official statement issued by the War Office today says that 750,000 men were engaged in battle on Wednesday between Rheims and Verdun, France. No details were made public.

It will be noted that the German War Office is silent regarding the issue of the fighting, which is significant in the light of previous official announcements from Berlin.

Later came the following from Paris, substantiating the first report:

PARIS, Sept. 4.—The German advance on Paris has been stopped. The allies are successfully repulsing the invaders' columns. The advantage has been with the British and French troops all along the line since the fighting was resumed this morning.

This news was based on official reports from the front, which were given out at the office of General Gallieni, the Military Governor of Paris, at 1:55 o'clock this afternoon.

RUMOR PARIS IS TO SURRENDER.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—The Chronicle's correspondent at Rouen, France, reports he has learned that the authorities of Paris are considering the surrender of that city to the Germans to prevent the destruction of property by artillery fire.

GERMANY'S ADVANCING ARMIES NOW ONLY 32 MILES FROM FRENCH CAPITAL

FURIOUS FIGHTING INFLICTS BIG LOSSES

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.
Staff Correspondent of the American.

PARIS, Sept. 4.—Under the ceaseless pounding of the centre in the attack the allies' left wing has been forced back upon its third line of defence. If the northwest flank of the Anglo-French line again gives way, the Germans will be at the outer ring of Paris forts upon the north.

Mezieres is reported to have fallen. This city has been under investment by German forces in for Crown Prince Frederick William and Grand Duke Albrecht.

(Mezieres is a fortified city, upon the River Meuse, 132 miles east by northeast from Paris).

The line of the allies in the north is still intact, but it has been unable to stem the steady advance of the Kaiser's legions. Germans are in the vicinity of Senlis, only thirty-two miles northeast of the capital. Refugees arriving here today reported that the town has been under bombardment by the Germans.

General Gallieni, French Governor of Paris, explains the steady rearward movement of the allies' left wing as due to strategic necessities.

General Gallieni issued the following statement upon the situation:

"SITUATION FAVORABLE."

"The situation is looked upon favorably here. Reports from the front say that the advance of the Germans upon the extreme right is somewhat slower and that the violent fighting in the vicinity of Compeigne resulted in favor of the allies.

"The three German army corps (120,000), that made such a sensational march toward the capital have begun to show signs of fatigue.

"It is confirmed that the Germans are transporting troops post-haste back to their eastern frontier to meet the onrush of the Russians.

"In Lorraine the French are progressing along the right bank of the River Sarone, a few miles from Luneville.

"No activity is reported from the French centre in the neighborhood of Rethel and the Meuse.

"As far as Paris is concerned the defensive works are in an excellent state, manned with picked men.

"The capital is perfectly quiet and the people are in a resolute frame of mind."

SENLIS BOMBARDED.

That the Germans have been pushing their heavy artillery to the front, keeping pace with the amazingly rapid advance of the first line, is indicated by the fact that Senlis was under the bombardment.

That the advance guard of General Von Kluk has been able to push far westward is shown by word from Beauvais, which is thirty-eight miles northwest of Paris. Several newspaper correspondents, who have been traveling with the left wing of General Paul Pau's force, were left stranded near Beauvais by the French and English lines, falling back rapidly before the approach of the Germans. They were taken prisoners, but later managed to escape back to the French lines, where they reported that the Germans were advancing in large numbers.

The allies continue to show valiant resistance, stubbornly contesting every inch of ground that they are compelled to yield. They are outnumbered, but have a tremendous advantage in defensive work.

In fruitlessly vivid advance of the Germans has been made against strongly entrenched positions where the British and French had the advantage of earthworks and barricades built of stones and fallen trees.

ARMY IN "V" FORMATION.

The German army, which is advancing on Paris from the northeast is aligned in a "V" formation with the point aimed at the line lying between Meux and Beaumont. To meet this attack the French and British troops have been formed in "V" shape with the wings extending westward from the Seine and eastward along the Marne.

There is a sense of expectation, based upon the German tactics employed at Liege and Namur, that the German plan is not to besiege Paris, but to attempt to force a breach in the chain of fortresses with their newest Krupp guns and gain an entrance through the hole made in the defensive works of the capital.

On the other hand there are some who believe that the real object of the Germans is not Paris, but a wide enveloping movement westward, then south, in order to surround the entire allied army and force its surrender. If this is really the plan of the German general staff it is one of the most extensive and daring military operations ever attempted.

TO BLOCK REINFORCEMENTS.

The Germans have established a line westward from the Belgian frontier to a point near Dieppe and there is strong ground for fears that General Von Kluk will be able to prevent British reinforcements arriving from England, from joining the allied army, unless they are landed west of the mouth of the Seine.

It is more than marvelous to understand how the Germans are able to transport enormous quantities of artillery from their base. The soldiers are gaunt from marching and hard fighting and their haversacks are almost barren of food, but their ammunition belts are always full and the ammunition wagons, crammed with projectiles and bombs, are always up to the van.

In battle and out the German soldiers sing their national anthem and the other German songs they love as well. In the darkness of a night attack, in the lull of the cannonade, the German troops go into battle to the tune of the "Wacht Am Rhine."

Evidence of the furious character of the fighting northeast of this city is shown by the fact that up to Thursday night 5,000 wounded had been taken to the military hospitals in Lyons, among them three generals. Announcement is made that General Plessier has died in the hospital there.

Grand Duke Sends News of Victory to the Czar

PETROGRAD, Sept. 4.—Grand Duke Nicholas, commander-in-chief of the Russian armies, sent the following dispatch to Czar Nicholas from the front today:

"With extreme joy and thanking God, I announce to Your Majesty that the victorious army under General Russky has captured Lemberg. General Brussiloff has taken Halicz.

"I beg Your Majesty to confer on General Ruzsky, in recognition of his previous service, the fourth class of the Order of St. George, for the capture of Lemberg, the third class of the same order, and on General Brussiloff, for his services in all the fighting, the fourth class of the Order of St. George."

AMBASSADOR BEY DENIES TURKEY CONTEMPLATES WAR

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—A cablegram from the foreign office at Constantinople, which was construed by Ambassador A. Rustem Bey as wholly discrediting the reports that Turkey was about to make war upon Russia, was received today by the Turkish embassy. It read:

"By virtue of the neutrality we have declared, the Turkish military authorities have received orders to insure by every means possible the entire safety of merchant vessels of the belligerent nations taking refuge in our ports." The ambassador gave it as his opinion that this message disproved rumors that Turkey was at war or was about to enter the war.

The cable was dated yesterday. In denial of warlike statements attributed to him recently the ambassador said:

"Statements have been attributed to me in connection with the strained situation in the East which were not made at all by me, and others which by far exceed the meaning I wanted to convey and which make me appear to hold views which I do not entertain."

100,000 AUSTRIANS ARE CZAR'S PRISONERS

PETROGRAD, Sept. 4.—Two million Russian soldiers, operating along a front of 25 miles from Samost, Russian Poland, to the vicinity of Zuczawa, in the Austrian province of Bukovina, have driven the Austrian armies back with heavy losses, according to an official statement issued by the general staff today.

It is stated that the town of Czernowitz, in Bukovina, had been taken with little resistance, and that Solkiew, in Galicia, had been captured.

According to the official statement, which was a resume of the operations covering a period of twelve days, the Austrians who fled to Lemberg after being routed from that city surrendered, and the Galician capital is to be used as a base by the Russian army in northern Galicia.

SWEEPING VICTORIES.

The statement gave no details as to the operations in eastern Prussia, but said that satisfactory progress was being made there.

"Our victories over the Austrians," said the statement, "were greater than the early reports had indicated.

"One report from the front indicates that fully 100,000 prisoners have been taken.

"The Austrians that tried to strike at Zamost were temporarily successful because of their numerical superiority, but Russian reinforcements arrived and forced them back in disorder.

"The occupation of Zolkiew followed the battle east of Lemberg. The rear guard of the retreating Austrians is being cut to pieces by Russian cavalry, but their main force has reached and crossed the river San. Austrian artillery has been mounted along that stream, but it no more successful than along the Zlota-Lipa, it is likely to be captured.

"In addition to the great number of guns we took from the Austrians, we have acquired vast supplies.

"The Russian forces operating at the extreme left are moving toward Zuczawa, southeast of Czernowitz, which fell into our hands on August 31."

THREATEN BUDAPEST.

(The movement toward Zuczawa indicates that the Russian forces there have as their objective the Borge Pass in the Carpathian Mountains, with the intention of invading Hungary and striking at Budapest, directly to the west.)

A statement dealing with operations on Wednesday says:

"According to latest reports, the battle of September 2 resulted in Russian victories. In order to counteract Austrian intentions a vigorous attack was made which resulted successfully. The enemy retreated. Our trophies are a flag, mitrailleuses and many prisoners."

The location of this battle was not given, but is believed to have been northwest of Lemberg.

A later report from the right wing of the Russian armies' line says: "The Russian scored a victory over the Austrians between Lublin and Kholm (Cholm). The Austrians hastily retreated, the Russians capturing eight Maxims and 1,000 prisoners. The latter state that the Austrian army is panic-stricken. The Russians captured in the neighborhood of Lemberg yesterday twenty additional guns. Their advance continues uninterrupted.

ASQUITH CALLS FOR MORE VOLUNTEERS; SEES LONG AND DEADLY CONFLICT

ENGLAND MUST SEND MORE MEN TO WAR

By HERBERT TEMPLE,
American Staff Correspondent.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—Premier Asquith appealed to the men of England today to volunteer for military service. Despite the rapid enlistment that has been proceeding since Lord Kitchener called for an additional army of 600,000 men, it has not been fast enough to suit the government, which recognizes that the conflict will be long.

In concluding his appeal to the country for more volunteers, the Premier said:

PROTRACTED STRUGGLE.

"We are at present watching the early stages of what is going to be a protracted struggle, so we must steel ourselves to the task and persevere to the end."

In the early part of his appeal Premier Asquith had said:

"England has in France and Russia two of the greatest powers. Not one intends to separate from the others. Two divisions of magnificent British-Indian troops are en route to the front. Their association with the British soldiers and Dominion troops will maintain our flag, which no arms shall ever dishonor or dishonor."

Premier Asquith made it plain that the government looks for a long, hard struggle and that England must call still further upon the resources of the empire before she can hope for victory.

LAW BACKS MINISTRY.

The Premier made his appeal to the country, while speaking before a great mass meeting at Guildhall. He said that between 250,000 and 300,000 men had already enlisted, but that more were needed.

His announcement of the enrollment that has already taken place was greeted with a tumultuous cheer, all those in the great hall applauding. With the Premier on the speaker's stand were A. Bonar Law, the Unionist leader and political foe of Mr. Asquith, and ex-Premier Arthur J. Balfour. Both supported the plea voiced by the Premier, Mr. Law saying:

"Until the war is brought to a triumphant close the Premier must be the mouthpiece of the nation. His words should be heeded.

"The key to peace or war for nearly a generation was Berlin. The head of the Berlin government had but to whisper peace and there would have been no war. He did not speak that word, but drew the sword. May the accursed system he represents perish by it.

"But for the navy England's fate would have been the same as Belgium's."

ENDORSE PREMIER.

Mr. Balfour followed in similar strain and when he concluded the mass meeting, which was attended by many of the most notable men of London animously adopted a resolution indorsing the action of the government in vindicating the rights of the small States of Europe and supporting the Premier's declaration that the country should prosecute the war to a victorious conclusion. As cheers resounded through Guildhall after the resolution was adopted, Premier Asquith rose again. When quiet was restored he said:

"The British navy will give time and means to create the powerful military force, which England must yield before the struggle is brought to a conclusion. I am sure the English have only to endure to conquer. At the end of the contest the British and their allies will find victory and honor."

The first theory that the war would be short because of the mighty powers opposing the German war machine has been abandoned, and now the chief aim is to raise as rapidly as possible the additional army of 500,000 men demanded by Secretary of War Earl Kitchener.

TELL OF HEAVY LOSSES.

The government press bureau statement, showing that the casualties of the first British expeditionary force were 10,399 men killed, wounded and missing, shows the intensity of the conflict which is being waged across the English Channel.

Among the British press the opinion is unanimous that England is committed to a long and bloody war. They believe that the power of the British and Russian empires eventually must wear down the forces of Germany and that the resources of Canada, Australia and India will have to be the determining factor in the long run.

BOSTON AMERICAN ARTIST JOINS THE FRENCH FOREIGN LEGION

PARIS, Sept. 4.—William Graves Sharp, the newly appointed American ambassador, is here, but he has not yet assumed his duties. He held a conference with Mr. Herrick and said that he had been instructed by Secretary Bryan to study the situation and to agree with Mr. Herrick as to the best time for him to install himself.

Some of the newspapers, notably the Temps, have announced their intention of following the government to Bordeaux. The railway stations of the lines running to the southern coast are filled to overflowing night and day. Scores of persons slept upon benches and upon the floor last night. The shutters are on hundreds of stores. Carts filled with roses pass through the streets. The flowers are sold at ten cents a bunch and many persons buy them and present them to soldiers.

There is an unusual stillness in the streets. News vendors no longer shout their wares, pointing to the sensational headlines on the first page. Automobiles filled with officers in uniform or Red Cross nurses pass to and fro in the streets.

The French in khaki, ambulances, red coats and the Englishmen in their drab khaki are respectfully saluted everywhere and occasionally cheered.

The famous public libraries and museums remain open. There were large crowds in them yesterday. It seemed that intellectual life rose superior over the grimness of war.

M. Gervex, the playwright and treasurer of the Authors' Society, has elected to remain in the city.

"I have all the funds of my society in my possession," said he; "no German will touch them as long as the breath of life is in my body."

The French feel that they have the sympathy of the United States in their struggle. This has been strengthened by the fact that a number of Americans have formed a foreign legion to help fight the Germans. The American volunteers are in good spirits and anxious to get to the front. They are being drilled twelve hours a day. Ten more Americans have joined them since their recruiting office in Paris. Among them are two brothers named Rockwell from North Carolina; another is Arthur Williams of Montana, who crossed the Atlantic for the adventure of the thing. A fourth is "Jack" Casey, formerly an artist on the Boston AMERICAN.

BORDEAUX, NEW CAPITAL OF FRANCE, UNDER MARTIAL LAW

BORDEAUX, France, Sept. 4.—Martial law was proclaimed here today and French troops are now in control in the new capital of France.

The various departments of the government are working as smoothly as possible under the circumstances. The War Department is in constant wireless communication with General Gallieni in Paris and General Joffre, the French commander-in-chief in the field.

The government has issued a proclamation transferring the Bank of France from Paris to this city in order to provide for the financial need of the government.

Thousands of refugees from Paris are coming to Bordeaux and the city is jammed far beyond its normal population. All the hotels and boarding houses are overflowing and so great is the continued inrush that public buildings are being thrown open for use as sleeping quarters.

FIRST CABINET MEETING.

President Poincare held his first conference with his ministers in the new capital during the morning. They gathered at the residence in the Prefecture, which President Poincare has taken for his home.

The War Office, which has been located in one of the buildings of the University of Bordeaux, is open day and night and is humming with constant activity. Representatives of foreign governments and heads of the various departments of the French government are settling down in such quarters as they can find.

The population is giving constant demonstrations of its patriotism and the President and his ministers are loudly cheered whenever they appear in public. News from Paris was eagerly awaited by the temporary and transient populace today. Every scrap of information was eagerly seized upon.

Military men consider that the removal of the capital to this city was the wisest and most practical move possible, however trying it might be to the pride of the nation.

The hope of the allies is that Paris may be defended as the base of the chain of armies across the country and that its successful investment by the Germans will be impossible.

In Bordeaux, the government can work under conditions more nearly approaching normal than amid the distractions of a military camp such as Paris has now become.

3 BOSTON SOCIETY GIRLS TELL OF WAR EXPERIENCES

Three well known Boston society girls, Miss Esther Slater, Miss Dorothy Whipple and Miss Julia Meyer, who were stranded in Europe at the outbreak of the war, are today telling their friends of their experiences.

The three girls were passengers on the Cunard liner Mauretania when it docked in New York. They reached Boston early today and were greeted by a score of friends.

Miss Julia Meyer was at Budapest when war was declared. She caught the last train out and was held up several times before she reach London where she awaited the arrival of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George von L. Meyer.

Miss Slater is the daughter of Mrs. Horatio N. Slater of No. 448 Beacon street. She was accompanied by her mother and her sister, Roy. Miss Whipple is the daughter of Sherman L. Whipple.

George von L. Meyer of Boston, former Secretary of the Navy, in talking on the naval aspect of the war, gave as his opinion that England was invincible on the sea and continued:

"In this connection there is one thing I want to bring out clearly: Our people should understand that important as it has been for England to have her navy control the Atlantic, just as important is it to the United States to control the Pacific.

"It is absurd, in view of present conditions for our nation to waver over the expenditure of $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 a year on a naval building program, when such expenditure may mean the saving of two billions. We ought to build four battleships a year for the next four years."

'TRAIN MEN TO FIGHT,' CLEMENCEAU APPEALS

PARIS, Sept. 4.—"Train Frenchmen to fight," demands M. Clemenceau, in an article headed "To the End." He writes:

"The Germans are outside of Paris. What is the military value of our entrenched camp? I cannot tell.

"Paris cannot be invested. That is understood, but it is equally certain that communications may be cut off, and it is necessary that provincial France receive autonomy and defence, without which the whole management of the French forces will be paralyzed. Whatever happens, there is only one central rallying point for all truly patriotic citizens of the government.

"We have suffered heavy losses, but have still a strong male population on which we can draw. For a long time henceforth it should be the occupation of the government to prepare, equip and train men to meet the requirements of the generalissimo-chief.

"From the communiques I understand we left the approach open. Germans, reserving power, outflank the enemy on both sides. From what I have seen I conclude that General Joffre belongs to the school of temporizers. In the present circumstances probably no better tactics are possible with regard to future operations.

"The Russian invasion is now exercising such pressure both upon Austria and Germany that William will soon be forced to choose between disaster in the East and disaster in the West. Already the news of German movements eastward seems to minimize the importance of the march upon Paris."

Filene's

"This battle was fought two years ago, in Tokio."—Gen. Kuroki at Manchuria.

IT IS related that when the Japanese and Russian armies were in the thick of the most decisive Manchurian warfare a newspaper correspondent came upon General Kuroki fishing for minnows in a stream near Japanese army headquarters.

"GENERAL," exclaimed the correspondent, "you don't seem to be worrying much about the battle!"

"This battle was fought two years ago, in Tokio," replied the fisherman on whose shoulders rested chief responsibility for the Manchurian campaign.

Japan had planned every vital move two years previously—had known where and how the enemy would be met—had prepared to the last detail her scheme of victorious procedure.

On the day when Kuroki fished for minnows a death-dealing army was ticking away like a great clock.

SEVERAL things astound those who become newly acquainted with Filene methods. But perhaps most surprising is the length of time the store's policies, and procedures are planned in advance.

Today is supplied a striking example of that. As the second mile-stone of the new store's successful career is reached we find ourselves running smoothly on a schedule laid out two or more years ago.

Policies proving contrary to the mutual interest of the public and the business have been amended. But few of the basic plans coursing the new store's career have required change. These larger plans have stood because little things have not been permitted to warp or thwart them. Policies have not been sacrificed to profits. Misrepresentation has not been employed to convert mistakes into cash. Profits invariabiy are made secondary to policies proved sound.

ANOTHER Filene Store trait which surprises the uninformed is the speed with which merchandise is moved. It must win quick appreciation at first prices or straightway take on prices that will win appreciation for it.

That calls for right first-prices, which in turn call for right methods of buying.

Forming of a modern buying organization, and supplementing it with a selling staff measurably competent, was well under way before pick struck ground for this new store. Today these men and women are pursuing fixed policies which a few years ago were smiled upon as dreams of visionaries. They will continue to be fixed policies for a good many years.

Why? Because the public has endorsed them lastingly.

"THIS battle was fought two years ago, in Tokio." Kuroki's work was done. But are we fishing for minnows today? Not much! The battles of a good many other successful years to come are being planned right now.

THIS IS ONE of a series of advertisements relative to the second anniversary of the new store's opening and leading up to our SECOND BIRTHDAY SALE, on Tuesday and Wednesday, September 8 and 9. See Next Sunday's American for further news of the sale.

EVERY PART OF THE STORE will be represented with seasonable economies, resulting from months of planning. The whole family may participate, assured of pleasure and profit.

The anniversary street windows will contain no merchandise, but in a way typically Filene will point to what is going forward. Indoors the Streets of Filene will speak an economic word of Autumn styles.

DECLARES BRITISH FIRE APPALS GERMANS

FIND SPIES ARE ACTIVE NEAR PARIS

LONDON, Sept. 4—Martin H. Donohue, in a dispatch dated town of ——, department of Somme, France, Tuesday, Sept. 1, says:

"Appalling losses have been incurred by the fourth German army, which for two days has sought to envelop and destroy the British force forming the left wing of the allied army. Monday's fighting was no less desperate than that of Sunday. Fresh artillery and fresh infantry were sent to the assistance of the British commander. There was enormous pressure directed against our front, causing a change of position. In our new position we are holding on and defying the whole concentrated might of the enemy to dislodge us.

"It has been a merciless combat throughout, but the superiority the British artillery fire coupled with the indomitable pluck of the British infantry told in the end, and subdued our splendid fellows successfully to carry out the role entrusted to them, viz., to delay the German advance by disputing every inch of ground. A few more days of the struggle and Monday and the fourth German army invading northern France will have destroyed itself completely.

ATTACK IN MASS.

"No army that ever existed could endure and survive the terrible losses sustained by the Germans in the last few days. Whole divisions of infantry have disappeared, blotted out of existence by the deadly fire of the British. The enemy still clings to his favorite formation of attack—in masse.

"It is little wonder if demoralization is beginning to make its appearance in the shattered ranks. Their infantry has lost its order. It no longer displays any vigor in pushing home the attack.

"The fearful punishment to which the German infantry has been subjected is beginning to tell. In the final assaults of yesterday and today the British position the assaulting columns on coming within the zone of our infantry fire speedily manifested signs of unsteadiness. They showed a disinclination to face the gruelling fire, they were even seen to waver, and more than once they broke and fled in confusion despite the attempts of their officers to rally them.

"As a result of this prolonged battle the northern German army cannot be said to have gained any marked or decisive advantage over the British army which has offered such heroic and so stubborn a resistance. The German right has been able to advance a few miles further south and that is about all.

'SLAUGHTER GREAT.'

"During this morning there seems to have been a lull in the fighting, but it is difficult to say if the self-imposed truce will be of long or short duration. Undoubtedly the slaughter of German effectives has been very great and the expenditure of artillery and their ammunition enormous.

"The Germans in Northern France are at a great and undoubtedly unsafe distance from their supply base. They have been unable to avail themselves of the Belgian railways and for the daily requirements of no vast an army, there is an insufficiency of animal and motor transports.

"Every day's delay in the forward movement serves to diminish the German chances of ultimate success and to render more precarious the position of the invading force in Northern France. It cannot attempt to retire without running the risk of irretrievable disaster. For that reason it is almost certain to resume the offensive and seek to crush the allied line, even though annihilation should subsequently await it.

"Under the walls of Paris spies are active. In this district seven were caught yesterday. This morning a detachment of Highlanders surprised a body of Uhlans at a farm house and killed or captured them all."

BOSTON JEWS PLAN MEETING SEPT. 24 TO AID WAR VICTIMS

Jewish organizations of Massachusetts are planning a meeting in Boston on September 24 to launch a nation-wide campaign to relieve the distress of the Jewish Hebrews affected by the war.

Louis D. Brandeis and other prominent Hebrews of Greater Boston are making arrangements for the meeting. Dr. Schmarja Levin, a former member of the Russian Duma, will probably be one of the speakers.

The Federation of American Zionists has received word from Europe that the headquarters in Berlin has practically suspended operations owing to the conditions of the war that exist in Germany, and that the entire propaganda is paralyzed in Germany, Austria and Russia, and also in England.

50 BOSTON GREEK RESERVISTS LEAVE AFTER CALL TO ARMS

In response to the call for Greek reservists, fifty Greeks will sail from New York tomorrow for Greece. Already 150,000 Greek reservists who have been in Greece since the Balkan war, have been put under arms. A Reuter Telegraph Company dispatch from Athens declares that war between Turkey and Greece may be expected at any hour.

There are 5,000 Greeks in Boston, nearly all of them reservists, and should war be declared, it is expected Boston's Greek colony will respond in a body.

What Modern Artillery Is and What It Can Do

The outstanding feature of the war in Europe from the point of view of military science has been the brilliant work of the German heavy artillery.

Before the war the French artillery service was credited with being the finest in the world. But the Germans thus far have won victory after victory where their artillery figured largely, while the French guns have scarcely appeared in the dispatches.

The work of the German artillery first appeared at Liege. The desperate Belgian defence there checked the German advance guard. But when the heavy German guns were brought up, the resistance vanished as though by magic, and Liege was occupied. One dispatch said that the first shell from the German heavy artillery struck in the Belgian bugle hall and killed 125 men.

The story was repeated at Namur. The artillery at Liege battered the forts to bits, and the extent of the destruction may be realized when it is stated that the Belgian general was actually pinned down by the wreckage of one explosion and captured by the entering Germans. When these guns were brought to bear on Namur it surrendered.

OF SEVERAL TYPES.

The artillery of today is of several types. In power it ranges from the machine guns which fire hundreds of bullets per minute to great siege nine and twelve-inch guns which fire a projectile as heavy as a small automobile two or three miles through the air.

Before the war it was not supposed that heavy, long-range artillery fire would be effective against fortifications. Yet comparatively brief bombardments served to reduce powerful forts at Liege.

The modern machine gun has revolutionised warfare. Its worth was first proved at the battle of Khartoum, where a small force of British slaughtered a charging force many times their number. Many military experts today hold that a machine gun with its complement of two, three or four men is the equal in strength of a company of 100 to 200 men—that is, that the machine gun can, alone beat off an attack of that number of men armed only with rifles.

An army in the field carries with it light artillery. This artillery is principally used for shrapnel fire. Shrapnel fire is effective up to 6,000 yards—that is, over three miles. It is so managed that the shrapnel shell bursts just before striking. A shrapnel shell may contain hundreds of bullets and when the shell bursts these bullets scatter in a sheaf-shape downward and forward, much as the balls of fire in a skyrocket dart forward when it bursts in the sky. Shrapnel is used against any body of troops or against opposing artillery. It is useful against entrenched forces, unless the trenches are roofed over.

USE 40-POUND SHELL.

A field army also carries guns of relatively small calibre—two to four inches—firing a shell weighing up to forty pounds. These shells, bursting, do greater damage than shrapnel, but are more localized in their effect.

The guns of heavier calibre are ordinarily used in siege operations, and are of two general kinds—those for direct fire and those for indirect. The latter include mortars and howitzers—the latter being in the nature of long mortars, or of short and stubby cannon, according to the point of view. The shells fired by these pieces rise high in the air and drop upon the enemy, exploding when they strike.

The power of modern artillery is tremendous. But it depends altogether on the accuracy and efficiency of its use. At Vera Cruz naval marines sent shells from their artillery through the windows of the naval academy and made of the interior a shambles. At Liege the heavy artillery knocked the forts to pieces like card houses.

Heavy shells of large calibre will penetrate ten to twenty feet of sand —four to six feet of concrete—or 14 inches to two feet of steel under good conditions. These shells may be arranged to explode on impact, or after they have penetrated, or before they strike. Hudson Maxim says there is no explosive capable of such an effect as to make a bomb dropped from an aeroplane such an object of terror as it has been painted. But the bombs dropped on Antwerp by a German dirigible did considerable damage, and the German shells seem to be charged with a new explosive of terrific violence. Mr. Maxim may be wrong.

ACCURACY OF FIRE.

In addition to their explosive force, modern shells cut, burn and asphyxiate all near where they strike.

Concerning the accuracy of fire, a modern Krupp mortar of eight-inch calibre has repeatedly dropped a large proportion of shells in a rectangle, thirty-three feet long and two feet wide, at two miles from the mortar.

A German army in the field has howitzers using thirty and 94-pound shells, also rapid fire Krupp guns using a 15-pound shrapnell shell. The French have a rapid-fire gun using a eighty pound shell, and a heavier howitzer. The Russians have an old-model Krupp field gun using a 13½-pound shell. The Austrian field piece is a Krupp gun using a 14½-pound shell, and the Austrians also have a howitzer using a thirty-pound shell. Italy uses the De Port gun, 1912 model, as a small calibre. The British have a variety of field and siege pieces. The belgian field piece is a Krupp.

GERMANS FAVOR NIGHT ATTACKS

RELY UPON ARTILLERY STRENGTH

By GERALD MORGAN.

Special war correspondent of the Boston AMERICAN and the London Times.

BOULOGNE, Sept. 4.—Readers fail to grasp the meaning of war as conducted on a huge scale today.

Each so-called army includes three or four army corps of 40,000 men each, who occupy a battle front of at least three miles to an army corps—often double that front. This makes a battle front between twenty and thirty miles for an army.

There are now three separate armies of Allies and three German armies on the northern frontier alone. No one can watch the operations of even one corps at a time. Of course the commanding generals get reports from the different parts of the field, but they do not necessarily communicate them even to their governments while the battle is progressing.

NIGHT ATTACKS FREQUENT.

Vast forests extend from Compiegne to Chantilly. A smaller one is located between these places and Senlis, about thirty miles north of Paris.

These facilitate retirement of the defending army. Also they offer a choice of action. These great woods effectually screen withdrawal or irruption against hostile columns coming from the north.

Between Senlis and Paris the plain is still covered with golden corn. There are numerous small towns with walled enclosures. Otherwise the land is open save for patches of forest. The hills are gentle and low.

Relying upon the deadly strength of the heavy artillery the Germans are trying to crash their way through, regardless of loss.

Night attacks are favorite German tactics. When the allied armies have retired to a new position and bivouacked for the night, the Germans repeatedly open terrific artillery fire at 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning. This is followed by cavalry and infantry charges.

SING WHEN NOT FIGHTING.

The sentries and outposts can hear all this and see nothing but the blinding lights of scores of shells bursting at the same time.

To the deafening crashes of machine guns in this inferno of noise and death and darkness comes an avalanche of German troops.

Time and time again German soldiers have told me that it is only hot coffee or hot soup, ever at hand, which keeps them going on their forced marches.

When not fighting the German companies march by singing all sorts of songs and national airs.

Lieutenant Geyir, chief military aide of General Jarodski, the German War commandant at Brussels, speaks English fluently, having married an American woman.

LIEGE FORTS SHATTERED.

"The German staff took none of their opponents seriously, except the French, and the French were the ones they had to beat," declared Lieutenant Geyis.

"The fall of the Liege forts fell a fortnight ago. Of one of its forts which I saw, nothing was left except an undistinguishable mass of shattered steel and concrete.

"Another had been completely destroyed by three shells.

"In a third many Belgians had actually gone insane, owing to the terrible effects of the explosions of the howitzers.

"He added that, of course, he could not tell the nature of the weapon, but I have seen a gun of fourteen-inch caliber, a howitzer, nearly twice as big as the howitzers used by the Japanese to batter down the forts of Port Arthur.

"On my way toward the fighting line at Soignes I got my first sight of the British prisoners. They were from all regiments, including some Highlanders. They were sitting in a village street under guard. I asked permission to speak to them. This was refused. They were being treated courteously by German non-commissioned officers, but were continually laughed at by their captors. It was bad taste to laugh at men down in their luck. They were receiving the same rations given to the German soldiers.

TAKEN FOR SPY.

"I did not see any officers, but a hotel-keeper told me three German officers, with the British officers prisoners, lunched there that morning.

"Between Soignes and Mons I was continually taken for an English refugee or spy. My papers were continually examined. German officers told me I ran great danger of being shot by German sentries. Although I am an American, they said I closely resembled an Englishman. My clothes were English.

"I made an effort to calculate the number of Germans wounded in the towns in the path of the army. The task was a difficult because Germans do not have field hospitals. They merely have a large number of doctors, who do dressings and perform the necessary operations.

"You never pass across a field or base hospital. The wounded are scattered in every village and town along the line. The dead are buried or bury in long, high mounds."

SING ON MARCHES

LONDON, Sept. 4.—Dispatches from correspondents state the German soldiers on many occasions are making forced marches and entering battle with nothing to sustain them but hot coffee and soup.

When not fighting the German companies march by singing all sorts of songs and national airs. They are divided into singing parts, some bases and some tenor, and the most perfect time is kept, one company taking up the refrain as soon as the other has stopped.

Holland Forbids Rice Exportation

THE HAGUE, Sept. 4.—The exportation of rice flour, which is largely used in Holland as a substitute for wheat flour, was forbidden today by royal decree.

PEKIN, Sept. 4.—The German consular officers expelled from Japan are proceeding to America.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—Three foreign vessels have been placed under the American flag under the new ship registry law. The ships are the British steamer Moldegaard, which is about to sail from Newport News for Brazil; the Robert Dollar, another British steamer, now at Rio Janeiro, and the British bark Windrush, at Buenos Ayres.

A-K Tablets for Various Forms Of Headache

"It is necessary in order to treat headaches properly to understand the causes which produce the affection," says Dr. J. W. Ray of Blockton, Ala. Continuing, he says: "Thymolinine can even begin the treatment of a disease without knowing what causes give rise to it, and we must remember that headache is to be treated according to the same rule. We must not only be particular to give a remedy intended to counteract the cause which produces the headache, but we must also give a remedy to relieve the pain until the cause of the trouble has been removed. To answer this purpose Anti-kamnia Tablets will be found a most convenient and satisfactory remedy. One tablet every one to three hours gives comfort and rest in the most severe cases of headache, neuralgia and particularly the headaches of women."

When we have a patient subject to regular attacks of sick headache, we should caution him to keep his bowels regular, for which nothing is better than "Actolds," and when he feels the least sign of an oncoming attack, he should take two A-K Tablets. Such patients should always be instructed to carry a few Anti-kamnia Tablets, so as to have them ready for instant use. These tablets are prompt in action, and can be depended on to produce relief in a very few minutes. Ask for A-K Tablets.

Anti-kamnia Tablets can be obtained at all druggists.

REPORT ARMY OF 500,000 RUSSIANS IS ON WAY TO BELGIAN BATTLEFIELDS

CZAR'S TROOPS TO AID IN CHECKING KAISER

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—Seventy-two thousand Russian troops are now in France and Belgium fighting with their allies, and 500,000 more are on their way from Russia to aid in the fight against the German invader, according to passengers on board the liner Mauretania, which arrived last night from English ports.

The army of 72,000 Russians is said there to Harwich, Dover and Grimsby, to have been brought from Russia, and carried across the English Channel landed at Aberdeen, Scotland, on the net from there and merged with the night of August 27, conveyed from allies within the last few days.

C. T. Wiley, wealthy lumber merchant, who was one of the Mauretania passengers, stated that he saw 40,000 troops in London, whose uniforms he did not recognize. After the troops had passed through he said he learned they were Russians. He declared that he heard later that at least 100,000 Russian troops were now in London awaiting transportation to France, and 500,000 were coming.

Sherman L. Whipple, the prominent Boston lawyer, was among those who discussed this startling new development in the war situation. He said:

"The day I left London all trains between London and Edinburgh were suspended, but heavy trains from Edinburgh to London were arriving every fifteen minutes. I heard that they were bringing Russian troops, that had been brought from Archangel to Aberdeen, Scotland, and were to be taken across the Channel from London to Dover and landed in the German rear, probably at Ostend, Belgium.

"Of course, with the censorship and the absence of war news in the British papers, not a word was published about this movement; but everybody was talking about it in private and I heard it stated that 47,000 men had been forwarded in the manner indicated up to the time that I left."

Mr. Whipple was asked for the English view as to the attitude of the United States on neutrality. He said:

"The English think our neutrality is of the strictest, but there is a general feeling that the United States ought to and will have to take the part of the allies, at least financially. England must soon float an enormous loan, and the English financiers feel that the United States should take it. The English feel that the United States and England have much in common in this war. Three or four Englishmen said to me, 'If Germany wins it will hurt the United States nearly as much as it does us.'

Mr. Whipple was asked if he was able during his stay in England to form an opinion as to the views of thinking Englishmen on the probable outcome of the war. His answer indicated that the English fear two of their allies more than they fear Germany.

"The English I have talked with," he said, "think that France may be beaten down, that Germany will suffer nearly as much as France, and that England will be hurt, except upon the sea. In such event they see Russia walking in unscathed to dictate terms of peace.

"She will demand the North Sea and the freedom of the Baltic, the possession of Constantinople and an outlet from the Black Sea. I believe Japan will control China, that no European Power can scare her, and that Russia, having obtained what she wished, will be most complaisant. In a word, the English fear that the people who will come best out of the war will be Russia and Japan."

Every precaution was taken by the military authorities to keep the transportation of the foreign soldiers through England from becoming known. It was believed the Russians would be joined at Ostend by some British marines and that these combined forces would co-operate with the Belgian army at Antwerp.

The journey from Archangel to Aberdeen occupied three days.

Transportation of troops from Archangel would be a relatively easy task at this time of the year, as the harbor usually is free of ice from July to September. A few weeks ago a party of American tourists, blocked in Russia by the declaration of war, chartered a steamer at Archangel and were taken to Bergen, Norway, whence they were able to reach England by ordinary steamer.

Naturally the greatest secrecy would be observed in transporting troops from Russia to aid the sorely pressed allies in France. Nothing in all probability could be learned of such an expedition's progress through the Arctic ocean and down to Scotland. This, it was pointed out, would be more feasible than carrying the troops direct through the North Sea to Belgium.

Moreover, the transports engaged in the work spared the long trip down the North Sea, could return for further reinforcements from Russia's great store of soldiers while the first expedition was being rushed overland to the east and south coasts of England and conveyed across the Channel by the immense fleet of vessels assembled at the British ports for moving troops to the continent.

19 INDICTED FOR WAR JUMP IN FOOD PRICES

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—Nine corporations and grms and ten individuals, all commission merchants, of this city, were indicted by a federal grand jury on charges of combining to control the buying and selling of foodstuffs in the District of Columbia in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

These are the first indictments to be returned as a result of President Wilson's instructions to the attorney-general to make a nation-wide investigation of advanced prices of food stuffs, immediately following the beginning of the war in Europe.

Judge Ashley M. Gould directed that bench warrants be issued for the defendants. They are liable to a fine not to exceed $5,000 or one year's imprisonment or both.

WILSON ASKS FOR HUNDRED MILLIONS

tatives Underwood, Fitzgerald and Mann.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Secretary of the Interior Lane, Postmaster-General Burleson and Attorney-General Gregory occupied seats on the House floor and Mrs. McAdoo sat in the executive gallery with Secretary Bryan.

The President concluded his message at 12:42 o'clock and amid renewed applause was escorted out of the chamber by the joint committee. He left immediately for the White House.

The message was referred to the Ways and Means Committee, the Democrats of which will take it up late today.

The President stated that during the month of August there was a falling off of $10,629,548 in customs revenues as compared with the same month last year and pointed out that a continuation of this condition would result for the current fiscal year of a loss of from $85,000,000 to $100,000,000. This is due, he said, to a decrease in imports owing to the extraordinary extent of the industrial area affected by the war, and not the tariff reductions.

"Hesitation and delay are the worst foe of bad policy under such conditions," said the President after pointing out the risk that would be run if the additional revenue were not raised.

The address of the President follows in full:

DUTY IS CLEAR.

Gentlemen of the Congress—I come to you today to discharge a duty which I wish with all my heart I might have been spared; but it is a duty which is very clear, and, therefore, I perform it without hesitation. I come to advise very earnestly that additional revenue be provided for the government. During the month of August there was, as compared with the corresponding month of last year, a falling off of $10,629,548 in the revenues collected from customs. A continuation of this decrease in the same proportion throughout the current fiscal year would probably mean a loss of customs revenues of from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000. I need not tell you to what this falling off is due. It is due, in chief part, not to the reductions recently made in the customs duties, but to the great decrease in importations; and that is due to the extraordinary extent of the industrial area affected by the present war in Europe. Conditions have arisen which no man foresaw; they affect the whole world of commerce and economic production, and they must be faced and dealt with.

DANGER IN DELAY.

It would be very unwise to postpone dealing with them. Delay in such a matter and in the particular circumstances in which we now find ourselves as a nation might involve consequences of the most embarrassing and deplorable sort, for which, I for one, would not care to be responsible. It would be very dangerous in the present circumstances to create a moment's doubt as to the strength and sufficiency of the treasury of the United States, its ability to assist; to steady and to maintain the financial obligations of the country.

The whole industrial activity of the country would be chilled and demoralized. Just now the peculiarly difficult financial problems of the moment are being successfully dealt with, with great self-possession and good sense and very sound judgment; but they are only in process of being worked out. If the process of solution is to be completed, no one must be given reason to doubt the solidity and adequacy of the treasury of the government which stands behind the whole method by which our difficulties are being met and handled.

RISK IS TOO GREAT.

The treasury itself could get along for a considerable period no doubt without immediate resort to new sources of taxation. But at what cost to the business of the community. Approximately $75,000,000, a large part of the present treasury balance, is now on deposit with national banks distributed throughout the country. It is deposited of course on call.

I need not point to you what the probable characteristics of the inconvenience and distress and confusion would be if the diminishing income of the treasury should make it necessary rapidly to withdraw these deposits. And yet without additional revenue that plainly might become necessary and the time when it became necessary could not be controlled or determined by the convenience of the business of the treasury itself. Such risks are not necessary and ought not to be run. We cannot too scrupulously or carefully safeguard a financial situation which is at best, while war continues in Europe, difficult and abnormal.

Hesitation and delay are the worst forms of bad policy under such conditions.

And we ought not to hesitate. We ought to resort to taxation; however we may regret the necessity of putting additional temporary burdens on our people. We sell bonds would be to make most untimely and unjustifiable demand on the money market, untimely, because this is manifestly not the time to withdraw working capital from other uses for the government's bills; unjustifiable, because unnecessary.

ABLE TO PAY.

The country is able to pay not just and reasonable taxes without distress. And to every other form of borrowing, whether for long periods or for short, there is the same objection.

These are not the circumstances. This is at this particular moment and in this particular exigency, not the market to borrow large sums of money. What we are seeking is to ease and assist every financial transaction—not to add a single additional embarrassment to the situation. The people of this country are both intelligent and profoundly patriotic. They are ready to meet the present conditions in the right way and to support the government with generous self denial. They know and understand and will be intolerant only of those who dodge responsibility or are not frank with them.

The occasion is not of our own making. We have no part in making it. But it is here. It affects us as directly and palpably almost as if we were participants in the circumstances which gave rise to it. We must accept the inevitable with calm judgment and unruffled spirits. Like men accustomed to deal with the unexpected, habituated to take care of themselves, masters of their own affairs and their own fortunes. We shall pay the bill, though we did not deliberately incur it.

PRAISE FOR CONGRESS.

In order to meet every demand upon the treasury without delay or peradventure and in order to keep the treasury strong, unquestionably strong, and strong throughout the present anxieties,

I respectfully urge that an additional revenue of $100,000,000 be raised through internal taxes devised in your wisdom to meet the emergency.

The only suggestion I take the liberty of making is that such sources of revenue be chosen as will begin to yield at once and yield with a certain and constant flow.

I cannot close without expressing the confidence with which I approach Congress, with regard to this or other matter, which has shown so untiring a devotion to public duty, which has responded to the needs of the nation throughout a long season, despite inevitable fatigue and personal sacrifice and so large a proportion of whose members have devoted their whole time and energy to the business of the country.

THINK LODGER JUMPED FROM EIGHTH STORY

A man thought to be Henry C. Holt of Epping, N. H., was found on the sidewalk in front of No. 19 Myrtle street at 6 a. m. today, terribly injured from jumping, as the police believe, from an eighth-story window because he was despondent from sickness and lack of work.

A letter in his pocket was addressed to "Mrs. Henry C. Holt, Box 112, Epping, N. H." It is said that the letter from Mrs. Holt that the writer was discouraged for the reasons given above.

The man was taken to the Relief Hospital, whose surgeons said he was hurt internally. That he should have a spark of life left after an eight-story plunge was considered remarkable.

Holt is fifty-five years old and occupied an eighth-floor room at No. 19. He has five children.

POLICE SEIZE GROOM LEAVING ON HONEYMOON

Frank Roberts and his bride, who was Helen Thornton, daughter of Mrs. Sarah Thornton of Washington street, Roxbury, are off on their honeymoon today congratulating themselves on the bridegroom's escape from arrest at the wedding reception at Dudley Hall.

The janitor at the apartment house No. 215 Harvard street rushed into the police station, much excited, and said some one had stolen the receiver of his telephone.

Onesime Decamer of No. 215 Pemberton street reported that a thief had taken advantage of the afternoon nap he was enjoying, entered his room, cut his trousers pocket and made away with $15.

Levi Maiser, who runs a cooper shop in Fifth street, East Cambridge, reported fifty-two burlap bags stolen from his premises.

All these thefts, the police claim, may have been done by a gang of four men who are expected to be arrested soon.

MRS. FRANK ROBERTS, Roxbury bride on her honeymoon, whose husband narrowly escaped arrest through a practical joke of their friends.

It wasn't his fault in the least. After the wedding at the rectory of St. Patrick de Sales Church, Roxbury, the wedding party repaired to Dudley Hall. There half a dozen facetious friends decided to kidnap the bridegroom. They lured him into the street, when he suspected their plan and started a tussle.

Patrolman Higgins and Lieutenant Murphy came running, and naturally seized Roberts. He tried to explain it was all a joke. But the wedding guests urged the officers on, and the crowd jeered, and Roberts would have been taken to the station house but for his plea that he be taken into the hall and identified. The officers at last consented to this, and the trouble was straightened out.

Itching a Severe Form of Eczema

How to Stop this Awful Nagging Disorder

You Feel Like a Pin Cushion

If you will get it firmly fixed in your mind that all forms of skin disease are a combination of nerve disorder and faulty nutrition you will then understand why S. S. S. the famous blood purifier overcomes such troubles.

Just as soon as S. S. S. enters the blood it rushes through the entire circulation in an average of three minutes. And as the skin is an outlet for the greater proportion of impurities in the blood, the action of S. S. S. is such that these impurities are converted into a substance that is readily expelled. Thus, instead of gathering on the surface to cause itching, eczema, salt rheum, tetter and other skin diseases they pass off as vapor or perspiration, the pores are left free, the nerves regain control and it is impossible for any disease to either gain or retain a foothold.

These facts are brought out in a mighty interesting book, "What the Mirror Tells," a copy of which is mailed free by The Swift Specific Co., 105 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. today. Emphatically insist upon S. S. S. and avoid substitutes.

TWO MEN SAVE LIFE OF GIRL AT NANTASKET

Miss May Fowler, a waitress at the Rockland House, Nantasket Beach, is recovering today from a narrow escape from death. Yesterday she was saved from drowning by two fellow employes of the hotel and was resuscitated only after an hour and a half of first aid work.

Her rescuers were Joseph Silva, a cabaret singer, and Michael McLoughlin, a clerk in the hotel. Miss Fowler, a girl of twenty-seven, is a fair swimmer, and when she went down to the beach for a dip in the afternoon did not hesitate to go in near the Atlantic bathhouse, outside the reservation patrolled by the life guards.

She swam out to a point where the water was a little over her head, then for some reason—either becoming panic-stricken or was taken ill, for she began to scream for help. It is supposed she was seized with cramps.

The two men happened to be near, heard her cries and raced into the water. The girl sank before they reached her, but her body floated just under the surface. She was unconscious. They dragged her ashore. She had been under water about a minute. A stretcher was summoned, she was raced to the emergency room of the State bathhouse and there revived by strenuous work.

For the month of August 1,794 new accounts were started at the Boston Postal Savings Banks, which, according to Postmaster Mansfield, today, is a big increase over the average. The deposits for the month were $159,402, and withdrawals $84,405. The large volume of business is declared to be due to the transferring of savings by those going abroad to take part in the European war from the savings and other banks to the government banks.

MRS. PEARSON GETS SENTENCE OF 4 MONTHS

Mrs. Catherine A. Pearson, the "mystery woman," who on Wednesday pleaded guilty to a charge of shoplifting and to charges of defrauding the Hotel Lenox and the Hotel Puritan of board and lodging, was today seltenced to four months' imprisonment by Judge Burke.

The woman, whose thin nerve since her arrest has amazed the officials, broke down after her sentence and went.

Judge Burke, before passing sentence, reproved the woman for her refusal to tell her story to the probation officials. Records were produced showing she had been sentenced to forty-five days' imprisonment for defrauding hotels in Toronto, and she admitted the sentence, but said she was "released by her landlady."

The woman has been prominent in Newport society, recently visited the family of Commodore James Curtis of Newport. She has a husband in the British army and a son in the Canadian volunteers.

WHAT IS GOOD TO EAT TODAY IN THE MARKET

Prices of Sunday dinners in Boston show a tendency to be cheaper. Market indications are that beef will come down, lamb remains low, and preserving fruits and vegetables are reasonable. Peaches are but fifty cents a basket at many stalls.

Eggs have taken a jump, however, owing to the hotels having a late season. The best eggs are forty-two cents, others ranging from thirty-five to twenty-seven. Imported cheese is scarce, and will soon be impossible to obtain. Print butter remains at thirty-six cents.

Tomatoes are five cents a pound. String beans, wax and butter beans are four pounds for a quarter. Blueberries, the only small fruit in market, are eighteen cents, preserving plums are forty cents a basket and some pickling onions are dispensed in market at fifteen cents a quart.

Cod and haddock have dropped to six cents, butterfish is eight and one-third, swordfish twenty cents, and smelts thirty cents.

Grapes are the leading fruit this week, generally at ten cents a pound. Crab apples can be had for eight cents a quart. Green corn is fifteen cents a dozen.

East Boston Boy Saved From Water

A rescue was effected today in East Boston when George Bimbo of No. 79 Sumner street jumped into the water at the end of Glendon Wharf and swam to the assistance of Andrew Barry, seven years old, who had fallen into the water. The Barry boy was exhausted when rescued and is on the dangerous list at the East Boston Relief Station. The doctors give great praise to Bimbo, who, after rescuing the limp body of young Barry, had presence of mind enough to roll the boy on a barrel to expel the water from his lungs. Andrew Barry lives at No. 250 Lexington street, East Boston.

POPE BENEDICT NEARLY FAINTED WHEN HE LEARNED OF HIS ELECTION

TO CROWN THE POPE ON SUNDAY

By CAMILLO CIANFARRA.
Special Cable to American.

ROME, Sept. 4.—Giacomo Della Chiesa, Archbishop of Bologna, Italy, chosen Supreme Pontiff of the Hierarchy of the Catholic Church, will receive the triple crown next Sunday.

The Pontiff, who is in his fifty-ninth year, had been a cardinal only since last May. He was an advisor and intimate friend of Pope Pius X., and was looked upon as a "market man" in the Church, having been trained in its diplomatic and administrative service ever since his ordination to the priesthood on December 21, 1878. A learned statesman, he combines the qualities of Pope Pius X. and Leo XIII.

Pope Benedict XV. is a member of the Italian nobility, and his election once more emphatically illustrates the remarkable catholicity of the Church and its freedom from social distinctions. His origin is in striking contrast to that of Pope Pius X., who was the son of a Venetian postman, while Pope Benedict XV. comes of one of the oldest families of Italian aristocracy.

Cardinals Gibbons and O'Connell, from the United States, arrived just after the new Pope had been elected. Cardinal Farley of New York, who arrived several days ago, took part in the conclave. Cardinal Falconi, an American by adoption, also participated in the election.

ELECTION ON NINTH BALLOT.

Nine ballots were required by the conclave of the Sacred College to arrive at a choice. Announcement that a large number of cardinals, both Italian and foreigners, had agreed to vote for him and that many others were not opposed to him, was disclosed as a surprise to Cardinal Della Chiesa.

Among many members of the Sacred College his name had been frequently mentioned as that of the one who would ultimately triumph, but this fact was not made public, and his election came as a surprise.

Pope Benedict XV., who was chosen by the College of Cardinals as the 260th Pontiff, and who will be crowned on Sunday.

On Monday, the day on which the conclave opened, Cardinal Della Chiesa told a number of friends who called to wish him success, that he considered himself unworthy of the honor. He mentioned the names of Cardinals Gasparri and Ferratis as more likely candidates.

The first balloting Monday evening revealed the fact that opposition to Cardinal Maffi was growing stronger, although he was reported to have received thirty votes. The second balloting proved him still weaker. Only Cardinal Casparri held his own. The contest now appeared to be between Cardinals Maffi and Casparri.

HURRIED CONSULTATION.

A hurried consultation was then held in the apartments of Cardinal Della Volpe. Twenty cardinals attended the gathering. At the conference Cardinal Della Chiesa's name proved acceptable to all. The last to give his consent was Cardinal Gotti, who turned his vote over to his powerful friends.

The security and counting of ballots was a solemn and impressive scene. As the secretary read the ballots the name of Cardinal Della Chiesa was steadily repeated.

The cardinal, who was unaware of the agreement that had been made, grew uneasy and nervously looked into the beaming countenances of his colleagues as the secretary recorded the ballots.

When the cardinal's name was pronounced for the thirty-ninth time, making the election certain, the canopies over the thrones of all the other cardinals were dropped, in accordance with age-old custom. Only the canopy of Cardinal Della Chiesa remained in place.

NEW POPE NEARLY FAINTS.

Seemingly stunned, and unable to believe that he had been elected Pope, he abruptly stood up, swayed and would have fallen to the floor had not Cardinal De Lai rushed forward and supported him.

So overcome was the Pontiff that he was unable to speak, but motioned his hand toward the altar and was escorted thither. He there knelt and prayed. In a few moments he was led to the temporary Papal throne and received the first adoration of the cardinals.

Each of his former colleagues now paid homage by kissing his foot, then his hand, and lastly were received by him in embrace. His first words were of thanks to the members of the conclave, then he added:

"Next to God and you my thoughts are of the countries which are the innocent victims of this war. This day has been terribly saddened by the conflagration we are now witnessing. Tell my children that I will pray to God to cause no further bloodshed and to restore peace among the Christian nations."

The Italian press remarks upon the fact that the Pope, when elected, was occupying apartment No. 13, as his was the thirteenth cardinal extracted when the apartments were allotted.

HYDE VOICES OPINIONS ON 'WANTON WAR'

President William DeWitt Hyde, of Bowdoin College, has put forth the following sentiments on the war and published them in the current issue of The Congregationalist.

CONDEMNATION of the warfanatics who sow the seed and are reaping the harvest of international hate.

ABHORRENCE of autocracy everywhere; but most intense abherrence of it where culture and enlightenment make it most of an anachronism.

PITY for the millions of artisans and peasants who are driven like cattle to slaughter; for their widows, parents and orphans left in desolation; and for the physical, mental and moral deterioration of the contending nations.

ADMIRATION for the soldiers of all nations who freely put country before life, and for the statesmen of whatever nations have looked beyond their own immediate advantage to the ultimate effect of their action on humanity.

DETERMINATION to establish courts and treaties which shall brand the nation that rushes into war without appeal to the judgment of disinterested parties as an outlaw among nations, and an enemy of the human race.

HOPE that the perfection of the machinery of murder will make men revolt from the cruelty of using it.

TRUST that increasing international brotherhood in industry, trade, art, society and religion will speedily eradicate the brutal instincts on which the war-fever feeds.

These are the sentiments with which Americans contemplate the horror of this needless, useless, wicked, wanton war.

APPEALS FOR WORK TO KEEP HER CHILDREN

A letter to the AMERICAN comes from a Charlestown mother who asks work for herself and husband, that they may keep their children with them. The letter speaks for itself, as follows:

Editor AMERICAN:

My husband has been out of work for some time and cannot find work anywhere. Last Saturday I had four children taken from me and brought into court as neglected children. Just because their father is out of work they have to face that charge. When their father is working they have the best of care; but what are you going to do when there is no work.

I have one baby at home with me—expect to be put on the street any minute. Will you please, as a favor to me and the children, publish this in the paper and see if my husband cannot get work. Will go anywhere to work.

The children are to be brought up in court again next Saturday. I come to you to help me get my children back home again with me. It broke their hearts to go away from home. They cried all the time. Neglected children will not care whether they have home or not. My children love their father and mother. Their father used to take them for a walk every night. They will miss this.

I appeal to you to try and find both of us work. I may be where I am for another day. After that I don't know where I will be. Please let me know by the bearer of this letter if you will do this for me. Respectfully yours,

MRS. KING,
2 Gray street, Charlestown.

P. S.—Will take any kind of work, farm or city. My husband is a carpenter by trade.

P. S.—Both are strictly temperate people.

ECZEMA BLOTCHES ITCHED SEVERELY

On Face. So Bad at Night Could Hardly Sleep. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. In Two Weeks Trouble Gone.

88 Gooding St., Pawtucket, R. I.—"My face broke out in certain blotches which itched severely. They were deep red and I could not keep from scratching it at night. It seemed as if I would scratch my face to pieces and they kept on so at night I could hardly sleep. I tried different creams and ointments but instead of getting better it seemed worse. After a month I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. The itching was much relieved that I went on and after two weeks the trouble was gone." (Signed) Miss Ellen S. Whitaker, Jan. 31, 1914.

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation and clogging of the pores, the common cause of pimples, blackheads and other unwholesome conditions of the skin. Although Cuticura Soap (25c.) and Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are sold by druggists everywhere, a sample of each with 32-p. Skin Book will be sent free upon request. Address "Cuticura, Dept. Get an Education Along Certain Well-Defined Lines—Complete the Education Already Begun

Abraham Lincoln laid the foundations of his own education.

As a boy, night after night, week after week and month after month, the future emancipator cast himself prone upon the floor and there, by the feeble and flickering light of the fire, studied zealously. Lincoln became one of the greatest of all figures in history. Without education he could not have accomplished what he did.

Lincoln is cited merely as an example. The progress of humanity depends upon the development of the human brain through education.

The greatness of any nation depends upon the average mental power of that nation's citizens, and mental power depends absolutely upon education.

Education is the ladder by which men and women climb to greater heights.

Therefore, in these twentieth century days, it is the duty, and the bounden duty, of every man and woman, regardless of age, to secure for himself or herself a complete education. There is NO EXCUSE for not doing so.

We have our public schools, our night schools, our universities, our colleges, our vocational schools, our schools of specialized training. Not all of them are within the reach of every one; most of them are. There is opportunity for all. Opportunity, however, must be grasped.

The present age is an age of specialization. A common school education is all right so far as it goes. It does not always go far enough. There are opportunities at hand for almost every one to better and to complete the education that he or she has. And the grasping of these opportunities, the securing of a better, a more complete education, would bring joy into many lives, would make better men and better women and consequently better citizens of countless thousands.

Specialize in this age of specialization.

How many thousands of young men are there at work in shops and factories today—at work as unskilled laborers and getting an unskilled laborer's wages—who could be, with the proper education, at work as bookkeepers, clerks or stenographers with better wages and with more chance of speedy advancement?

How many thousands of young men are there who are like these young women?

How many thousands of bright, intelligent men and boys are there who, if they had learned a trade or had prepared themselves for the battle of life more thoroughly, would be better and more contented citizens of this republic than they are now?

How many thousands of young men and young women who are musically inclined and who have never taken advantage of their chances to secure a good musical education?

No man can answer these questions. Man cannot even approximate the number.

But the chance is here, is at hand for every man, every woman. Sometimes it may take self-denial to avail one's self of the chance. Self-denial never hurt any one. Characters of men and women from time immemorial have been enriched and ennobled by the sacrifices made and the struggles in life met and conquered.

BE SPECIALISTS.

There are the business colleges for those who would secure a good business education. These colleges are practically within the reach of all. Learn to be a bookkeeper, a clerk, a correspondent, learn to be a business man or a business woman, if you feel that such an education would be of benefit to you.

There are the shorthand and telegraphy schools. Learn stenography or telegraphy.

There are the trade and the vocational schools. The good that such schools are doing, have done and will continue to do, cannot be told. A trade of any kind, the ability to do a certain kind of work as that work should be done, is a mighty useful thing to know. Yet altogether too many are neglecting their opportunities of learning trades and vocations from the schools that are established and that are thoroughly reliable.

There are the musical colleges, the schools for nurses—schools of all kinds—extending the beckoning hand to the men and the women of today through these advertisements.

There are the law schools and the medical schools and schools of transportation and other professions.

GRASP OPPORTUNITY WHEN OPPORTUNITY OFFERS.

THE OPPORTUNITY FOR SECURING A COMPLETE EDUCATION WAS NEVER BETTER THAN NOW.

BE SPECIALISTS.

GET AN EDUCATION ALONG CERTAIN WELL-DEFINED LINES. COMPLETE THE EDUCATION ALREADY BEGUN.

There can and will be no cause for regret.

BRITISH READY FOR GERMANY'S 'INVASION' PLAN

By Colonel Repington.
Military Expert of the American and London Times.

LONDON, Sept 3 (Delayed)—Private advices from Germany tell us the views of a German officer concerning the war. It is supposed, and of course, safely supposed, that the primary object of Germany is to crush France first.

The calculation of the average German officer was that Paris would be reached in four weeks, and, tabulating on the record of 1870, it was thought that subsequent resistance would not be prolonged.

When France was crushed it was supposed Germany would turn against Russia, but German military opinion would lean on offensive operations, not intended, as formerly, to carry on Russian territory, and no invasion of Russia was to find a place.

England according to these opinions was to be left till the last. The German army was to be turned until the utmost value for decisive operation

DREAM OF NEW EMPIRE.

It was supposed that when Paris had fallen and the French armies had been smashed, Calais, Boulogne and Dunkirk would become part and parcel of Germany, and with all the great ports in the hands of the Germans and the whole of the deepwater port of Western Continental Europe in their hands, the Germans would prepare to produce a Jutland on the most powerful scale against England, from world bases.

With such an object all the great armies and ships being concentrated were to be used to the utmost of their pressure day and night, in turning out warships of all classes during the prosecution of the war against Russia and France. The Russian fleet in the Baltic, now known to be in the Gulf of Finland, was to remain in control the latter point of the Straits of [illegible]

PLAN RECALLS NAPOLEON.

All the coast line was to be visible with batteries as in the days of Napoleon and under their protection, or by using interior waterways, [illegible] of submarines were to be sent out at the chance, ports.

A trifle more was to be done in crossing to subdue France [illegible] dirigible submarines [illegible] expected to play a conspicuous part in the operation of that [illegible] narrow straits.

MITCHELL'S SIDELIGHTS ON SPORTS

WELL, the Braves are back to where they were on Wednesday in other words they are in second place, one game behind the Giants.

But that's right. We do not expect the Braves to win all the time. If the Braves won all the time it would take all the fun and excitement out of things. And unless we can get fun and excitement out of baseball there is no use of baseball at all.

THE Phillies got to Tyler right in the pinch and Stallings didn't allow his star left-hander to stay long in the box. Tyler pitched less than two innings and did not need much rest before he is able to work again.

The embarrassment of his office was likely to happen to the best of them. George will be all right when called upon. That is the way to look at it. If Tyler were in some other club—Cubs or Giants for example—we might be saying he was all in.

DUTCH former Williams College lad, who received Tyler, pitched a fine game. After "Dutch" second inning the Phillies only scored one run. Five pitchers have been brought against Stallings says he has a pitcher with a wonderful curve ball and if yesterday's effort, to judge from the box score.

ALEXANDER has always been a great pitcher but for the Braves to-day. It is a long time since Alexander has made such heavy work of his pitching. The chances are victory today are much greater with that great pitcher on the way. The others on the staff ought not to cause Braves much trouble.

MCGRAW has received a telegram from Mr. Gaffney accepting the offer of the Red Sox manager to allow the Braves to play their remaining games in the Fenway Park. This means that the South End Park will not be used again this season. We knew that the Labor Day games would be staged at Fenway Park, but didn't know the remaining battles to be played by the Braves would stand now there will be big crowds throughout the month of September, unless the Braves "crack," as McGraw predicts.

The Braves are not going to "crack," however. Put a bet down on that.

THE celebrated team in command of Connie Mack dropped two games to the Red Sox yesterday. The Mackmen have been moving along all summer, some about the middle of July, but when they struck Boston they struck some good pitching. They were able to do very little against Foster or Wood. While they made eleven safe hits off Shore, Joe, many of them were scratches. On the other hand our boys got to the Philadelphia pitchers whenever it was to their best to do some scoring.

THE Athletics play a fine game of ball and it is a pleasure to see them in action. They are, of course, anxious to win every game to insure the winning of the pennant, but as long as they lose to the Red Sox they will have to postpone counting the world's series money.

THE two games yesterday were two fine games of ball. Sharp fielding, the right kind of hitting and other things that go to make an interesting pastime, are to be found at Fenway. And more than 15,000 people turned out to witness the contests. To repeat an old cliche—this is a great baseball town in the country.

A GLANCE over the records shows rather a curious turn of affairs in the three cornered struggling New York, Boston and St. Louis. In the series so far all the visitors have the better of it. Between the games in New York the Red Sox they will have to go to Boston this season. Manager Huggins says he has a team that can beat the Yankees on their own grounds. The truth of that is proven in the boxing ring as well as on the ball field.

Wrestling Carnival Staged Here Sept. 16

George V. Tooley announced today that he has practically completed plans for the opening wrestling carnival of the season, to be held in Mechanics building on Wednesday, September 16, with an all star card. Two matches are billed but inside and Tuohey leaves for the West tonight to complete the arrangements.

Joseph Hussane, the clever Bridgeport, will be one of the principals in one of the contests. Pat Connolly will be pitted against some crack American wrestler, while Jack Mahoney and Ted Sullivan, long Boston will reach home time to take part in the third number.

O'Keefe Beats McCoy.

BALTIMORE, Sept. Addie O'Keefe of Philadelphia won from Young McCoy of [illegible] in the eighth round here tonight.

Queen Quality Team to Play United Shoe

The second game of the series between the Queen Quality team and the United Shoe Machinery nine will be played tomorrow afternoon at Beverly, and another thrilling game is expected. The United Shoe nine won the first game 2 to 0, but the Queen Quality team has been strengthened and are confident of victory.

Johnny Murray and Buck Sweeney will be the battery for Queen Quality, while Jack Maloney and Ted Connor have returned to play in their positions.

Stanley Easy Winner.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 4—Stanley Ble gave a clever exhibition in the semi-finals at the Broadway A. C. here, beating Joe Belmont in easy fashion.

'Dutch' Leonard Out for Season

"Dutch" Leonard, the pitching sensation of the year will probably not be seen in a Red Sox uniform again this season. The star southpaw at present is carrying his left arm in a sling and does not expect to be able to take light exercise for at least three weeks.

A small bone in his forearm was broken while "Dutch" was forking on the Red Sox bench during Tuesday's doubl-header with the Browns.

RED SOX OUT TO CLEAN UP SERIES WITH THE ATHLETICS AFTER GREAT DOUBLE VICTORY

BRAVES BATTLE HARD TO REGAIN FIRST POSITION

What May Happen Today

If the Braves win and the Giants lose the Braves will return to first place, half a game ahead of the Giants.

If the Braves win and the Giants win, the New York outfit will hold its half game edge on the Boston outfit.

If the Braves lose and the Giants win, the Braves will be second, a game and a half back of the leaders.

If the Braves lose and the Giants lose, the relative positions of the teams will remain the same, with the Giants leading by half a game.

By NICK FLATLEY.

York is second place, after one of those seasons that all champion teams have. The Athletics seemingly need the Braves more than the Boston team needs the Giants on the latter's list immediate step toward winning the pennant.

There only a half game between the leaders and the outsiders and a chance to be put on the former for the Braves succeed in winning today from the Phillies, while the Giants lose a game to the Dodgers.

Such having happened, the Braves would again be in first place by the half a game.

The Giants won a double header yesterday, but in doing so used up their two best pitchers, Tesreau and Mat esson. With another one of fair on his hands for tomorrow, McGraw is very loath to be very hard put to it for pitchers when the big baseball series opens at Forbes Park, Labor Day.

CRITCHER DUE TODAY.

Battling the Phillies today, Mr. Wilie Keeler and Hugh Bedient will have a rather tough row to hoe with the odds on the score for the fight are very rife. Their location in southwest part of the town, as Lefty Tyler is to be pitching.

Tyler, however, needs a day off as since he pitched a no-hit game against the Cubs which ended after the pennant hopes had gone, four years ago. And the fact that Maranville had a chance to tie the game up with one hand tied of an extra base clout. The Cubs did get the run, however, will not hurt him a bit in the opinion of a couple Braves fans.

The fact that the Giants were hard fought games likely they were other nine last night will matter much once the race is on and it comes down to the wire.

YOUNGSTERS LOOK GOOD

One very encouraging feature of the affair was the showing of Wilson Davis and Crotchan in the box. Both pitchers who were supposed to have had nothing more than a trial before the season, performed on the slab.

Davis, claimed to Stallings to be a wonderful football hurler, was practically all right after he had settled his nerves, which the other youngster took good care of the few batters that faced him.

On the strength of the showing yesterday either one of the pair is quite likely to be sent in to start a game or two of these days.

Today the Braves will have to face Mayer, who has had nothing else but a splendid game for Doug and Company will be hard sledding. If losing a game are due to start winning another bunch, so the matter of just who is behind them to make a whole lot of difference.

GIANTS PUT ONE OVER.

The Giants, who have succeeded in getting back to their form for a short time, let us hope rather not be over when they played that double header yesterday, retrieved two of the league schedule called for. With a double battle on the offing for tomorrow McGraw would have been in desperate straits for pitchers against Boston had the original arrangement been carried out.

When the Braves and Saturday's two game sessions were first planned the date were pitched no doubt with a view to just such a situation as might tell. The sensational rush of the Giants, however, has placed matters in a sort of speedy position with the powers in New York, who fear the loss of the added thousands that the world's series games have been bringing in for the past few years.

Captain Johnny Evers is due to get back into the lineup for the Braves today, feeling fit, and this fact will help matters along in the few days remaining that is on.

EVERS BACK TODAY.

Even though Whitted filled in most acceptably there's a lot of punch Lewis adds to the Tyrolan is off the list. Further the team has always welcomed the return from temporary absences all season by bursts of the finest brand of baseball.

Whatever may happen between now and Monday the Braves will come home—to a royal welcome, incidentally—in position where they can take the lead away from the Giants.

Even if they lose the two remaining battles in Philadelphia and the Giants clean up their trio of contests against the Dodgers, the Labor Day opening will find the challengers in a matter of three games away from the Giants.

As McGraw's minions face three games here the Braves will have a chance to start and even should they could thrice pin the bee [illegible] plomb

FIGHT HERE FOR LEAD

While it is not probable that the Braves will take the field into camp again for three games or more, neither is it probable that the locals will twice defeat the Braves, or that the Giants will gather all three from the Dodgers, finding on forbs. The triple smashing of the Giants looks like the best bet in the three.

So come what will may [illegible] Labor Day, that splendid season when it rolls round will give the pennant and fans of Boston a chance to see a team of their own [illegible] fighting to hold the front [illegible] the one outfit in the league that seems to have any chance against them in the fight.

Constance Wavers in Her Strange Flight to Warn Tom

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XLIV.

CONSTANCE MEDFORD stood irresolute at the corner of the street on which the Hale home was situated. To her left the New York road stretched through the blue gloom of the starlit night. Below, at the foot of the hill to the right, the lights of the village glowed. The tall elms, arched overhead, cast deep shadows over and above her. With a woman's impulsive acceptance of an unproved idea as a fact, she had rushed from the house to meet and warn Tom Morton. Feminine intuition had brought her out here and had now as abruptly deserted her.

She stood hesitating in an agony of indecision. How was she to find Tom? What would she tell him if she did find him? What real cause had she for suspecting Ralph? These questions assailed her and she could answer none of them. She began to have a childishly guilty feeling. What would her uncle and aunt say if they knew she had gone out alone into the street? Perhaps they had already discovered her flight and were even now searching for her.

She glanced back at the house apprehensively and congratulated herself that her dark cloak and veil made her seem one with the tree shadows. She shivered and drew her wrap more closely around her. The night was cool and she seemed to have been standing here for a long time. What a fool's errand she had come on! With a movement of determination she started a few steps toward the house she had just left, then drew back as quickly into the shadows and stood still on the alert.

Footsteps had sounded on the pavement across the street. A man was strolling slowly up the hill. As he passed under a street lamp, she recognised him as the village policeman. Far down the New York road she heard the regular beat of a horse's hoofs. The man across the street had heard the sound too, and, stopping on the corner opposite Constance, stood still, waiting.

A buggy turned into Homewood avenue, and as the lantern swinging from the dashboard shone upon the policeman the driver reined in his horse.

A SMASH-UP

"Hello, Hen!" he called, facetiously. "Whatyer doin'? Huntin' burglars?"

"Hello, Ed!" the other returned sedately. "Fine night, ain't it?"

"It's all of that," the man in the buggy agreed. "Had a smash-up down the road, I see."

"Hadn't heard of it," replied the policeman. "Ottermobile?"

"Yeah. Must of skidded, I guess. But clean through the rail of the Stony Brook bridge and lit in the stream bed. Ain't nothing there now. I hollered, but nobody didn't answer. I guess they've walked back to the ferry. They left their headlight burnin', so there ain't no danger."

"More than most of them do," remarked the man on foot. "Fools! Well, good night, Edi Be good!"

"So long, Hen!"

The buggy rattled down the street. The policeman yawned widely and strolled back down the hill. He had turned his head he might have been amazed by the sight of a slight figure, wrapped in a dark cloak, running swiftly down the road toward New York.

The terror that Constance had felt earlier in the evening had gripped her again as she overheard the conversation between the two men. The unreasoning instinct that had driven her from the house now, panic-stricken, down the New York road toward the Stony Brook bridge. She ran until every breath in her body pain, then walked until she could once more breathe deeply, when she broke again into a run.

Unused to being abroad at night unattended, she forgot the nameless dangers which women and children fear when alone in the darkness and silence of out of doors. Once she stepped toward her and she shrank back in the deep shade of the roadside until the runabout had passed. With her subconscious mind she thought the figure in the car was familiar, but, possessed as she was by one idea, she forgot it as soon as it had passed.

By a strange psychosis which some masculine minds seem to understand, Constance Medford was convinced that it was Tom Morton's automobile which lay, overturned, beneath the shattered bridge rail; moreover that Tom Morton lay stricken, if not worse, perhaps dead. Her head swam and her feet stumbled, yet she kept right on, her breath coming in heavy sob-like gasps.

MR. HALE UNCERTAIN

She was careless now of what her uncle and his family might think or do, of what Tom might think, could he know all she was suffering for him. She only knew that she loved this man; that she was no longer afraid to admit this to herself, and that he was in danger, perhaps dying, for help! Her feet began to drag and catch on the stones of the road. From the valley behind her a man struck ten. Once more she rallied her tired body and hurried on.

Mr. Hale was a man who did not often waver in a decision, yet he wavered tonight. And as he was a man he was not supposed to yield to the proverbial feminine weakness of changing his mind. Yet tonight he did even this. As his motor drove, at his bidding, toward the ferry, John Hale abruptly countermanded his orders of a moment before. What fool he had been, he mused, not to have continued the conversation about Constance, instead of driving along the public road in this way in search of her. Moreover, while this was the main carriage and automobile thoroughfare to the ferry, the girl might have chosen a short cut if she had decided to take a boat to the city. Yet why should she do this when she could have gone so much more quickly by train? For he had shaved in such an ungrateful and strong way she deserved to be talked about. Anxiety was telling on John Hale's temper, and he spoke harshly.

"Turn around!" he ordered. "Drive back to the station. I will question the agent about the person I am looking for."

"No," the agent told him five minutes later, "I haven't seen anybody from your house come in here this evening."

"A pretty mess!" John Hale grumbled as he climbed back into his car. "I may as well tell you, Robert, that Miss Medford has started for town, and I want to stop her. Ask me no questions," as the man looked at him in amazement.

"No, sir, I won't," said the chauffeur, suppressing any evidence of the curiosity he felt. As he was driving the car slowly toward the Hale home, having received no further orders from his master, he offered a respectful, almost apologetic suggestion. "Excuse me, sir," he said, "but there's Hen Mickens coming along. Perhaps he's seen her."

"Stop then!" commanded Mr. Hale. But to his guarded question as to whether the policeman had seen "anyone from his house pass recently," Mickens replied in the negative.

"But," added the official, rejoicing like all of his type in the opportunity to impart information, "if any of your folks was ottermobiling perhaps you'd be interested in seein' the wreck down by Stony Brook Bridge."

Yet, when he had told all he had heard about the wreck, Mr. Hale seemed to ignore his presence, for, turning abruptly to his chauffeur, he issued a brief order.

"Drive down the road to New York!" he said quickly and with a decision that left no chance for questioning.

To Be Continued.

Very Urgent, Indeed!

After a fatiguing two hours in his padded office, followed by half a day's strenuous work at the club billiard table, Mr. Potter arrived home—worn out.

Slowly the weary bread-winner sought his cosy "study," put on his carpet slippers and a comfortable old coat, before composing himself for a nap. Mr. Potter—with that eye for detail that marks the business giant —touched the bell. A maid came to the door.

"Oh, Mary," he yawned, sinking contentedly into a roomy armchair, "I am very tired and do not wish to be disturbed on any account—not on any account, mind! That will do!"

Soon only the regular breathing of the sleeping master was to be heard, accompanied by the solemn ticking of a big clock that stood in the corner of the room. The clock ticked on for ten minutes or so, then—tap, tap—knocked gently on the door. But Potter heard it not.

Tap, tap! He stirred in his sleep, while the maid shivered nervously outside the door, which was suddenly thrown open by Mrs. Potter, who shook her husband roughly.

"Come at once, Peter!" I wouldn't have disturbed you, but there is a man in the hall to see you, and he says it's a matter of life and death."

And in a sense so it was. For, rushing blindly out into the hall, Mr. Potter found an insurance agent.

Examples of French Art in Dressmaking Which Will Be Equalled by American Designers Now That Necessity Demands It

THIS French model gown of Nile green and silver broadcaded satin shows the value of cleverness of cut. The skirt, circular in front and back, is draped on the zouave shape. The pannier falls across the rest of the skirt in a series of ripples. From under this short overskirt falls a petticoat of pulled silk point d'esprit.

THE saute-en-barque, the blouse of the sailor, was much worn this season. This one is of white embroidered net over a pretty little frock of organdie. The striped silk, blue and white, the skirt slightly draped very low at back over a high flounce of embroidered net.

Their Married Life

Warren Takes Helen to the Theatre, and the Mysterious Stranger Again Is in Evidence

Copyright, 1914, by International News Service

"HOW would you like to take in a show?" said Warren as they were finishing dinner.

"There are some really good shows in town now and it is a pretty cool evening."

"I think it would be fine, dear. What sounds awfully good?"

"I'll go and look one up in the paper and phone down while you are dressing. We ought not to have any trouble getting seats just now; what do you think?"

"I should think so. Let's go to see something real good. And Helen, without waiting for an answer, went into her room and switched the lights on over her dresser. She felt singularly happy tonight for some reason or other, and she hummed a gay little tune as she slipped out of her dress and into a kimono. She did her hair up swiftly with deft fingers and then stepped a minute to decide whether to wear a sash or one of her pretty dresses.

"Warren," she called finally, "shall I wear a suit or is it too warm?"

No answer but a rustling of the paper, and Helen went to the door and lifted a cool black and white gown from its hanger. She knew it was a very smart one, and one of Warren's favorites, and she did want to look pretty tonight for him. Soon little Winifred would be home again, and Helen caught up the child with the thought. Somehow the thought of Winifred took away the tired feeling she had had all the evening.

She wondered if she ought to be going to the theatre while her little girl was ill and needed her. And then the thought that she would be with her so very soon brought the color back to her face. Surely Warren knew what was best and he had said there was no need to worry.

WARREN THINKS HELEN "PRETTY DRESSY"

Helen pulled the drawer of her dressing table open hurriedly and sorted out a clean pair of gloves, and then pulled a soft black velvet hat down over her face, and wenr out to the living room.

Warren looked up as she came into the room.

"Pretty dressy, aren't you?" he remarked, looking her up and down critically.

"It is too warm for a suit, dear, and you always liked this dress so much."

"The dress is all right. I got the seats, but we'll have to go down early to get them. I'll just wash up a bit and then I'll be ready."

Going down in the elevator Helen looked into the tiny mirror anxiously to see if she really looked all right. A woman always likes to have a last look no matter how often she has assured herself of the fact that everything is all right.

Warren did not notice the furtive glance or he would have been sure to make a remark of some kind, and it wasn't until they had reached the theatre and Warren had gone to the box office for the seats that she heard any one speak approvingly or otherwise about her appearance. Then a woman passing rather near to her remarked languidly:

"Stunning little gown, isn't it? But that woman is rather too pale for black and white."

The women were lost in the crowd and Helen could not see what they looked like, and a moment later Warren came back with the tickets and they were being shown to their seats.

Helen was very quiet during the time remaining before the curtain went up. A casual remark about her looks worried her unreasonably. She always had been sensitive about herself, and, although nearly all the women she knew touching up their cheeks occasionally when they were going out, she had steadfastly held out against it. Somehow or other, the idea of painting her face was repulsive, even though it be just a light touch with a rabbit's foot.

"Pretty good seats, aren't they?" remarked Warren, and Helen was just about to ask him if he thought her too pale, when a sudden thought checked her. Perhaps it would be just as well not to tell Warren what she had overheard; she would keep it to herself and some time when she could put the gown on for Louise she would ask her opinion. Somehow she did not believe that Louise used anything of the kind.

A moment later the curtain rose, and for the rest of the evening Helen was enthralled with the play. The situation was very strong, with many tense moments, and Helen hardly spoke, even between acts.

"Wasn't it good, dear?" she queried when it was all over and they rose to go.

"Oh, I don't know, I'm not so very strong for a play of this kind. I wanted you to see something you liked, you know, and I knew this would be just about what you wanted. I should think you women could get enough sorrow out of real life without coming to the theatre for more."

Helen followed Warren out of the theatre and together they mingled with the crowd on the street.

"Where shall we go for a bite to eat, might as well do things up brown?"

"Anywhere, dear, you know it doesn't make a bit of difference to me."

"All right, we'll go right in here, they can fix up a lobster in here as well as they can anywhere in Boston. Are you hungry?

It was quite a gay little supper, with Helen looking her best across the table; the rose colored shades casting a faint pink flush over her cheeks, and Warren was most considerate. As they stepped into the apartment later Helen thought that she had quite as nice a time as she had had expected.

They walked on into the front, and a moment later Nora unlatched the kitchen door and came to the door of the living room.

"Did you get your telephone message, Mrs. Curtis? I waited up for fear you wouldn't find it. There it is written out over on the table."

Warren took a scribbling by her table and he picked up the paper and glanced over it casually before handing it to Helen.

Nora had scrawled across the paper the words "Mr. Atkinson called up."

Helen read the message with a queer sinking of the heart, and then she looked across at Warren. Nora had slipped back to her room, now that the message was off her mind, and Helen was inwardly glad for fear Warren should decide to ask her questions. That would be too humiliating, and if the thought should happen to strike him Warren would think nothing of cross-questioning Nora. Helen felt, somehow, as though the time had passed when she could spend a pleasant evening with Warren. Something always happened to spoil it all.

HELEN TRIES TO EXPLAIN THE CASE, TO WARREN

Warren had been regarding her steadily for some time. Not angrily, as she had supposed he would, but with a surprised look in his eyes. Before he could speak Helen crossed the room to his side, something inwardly driving her on.

"I know it looks as though I have not told you the truth, Warren," she said shyly, "but I assure you from the bottom of my heart that I know no more about this man than you do. The whole thing sounds like a joke to me, and if I can look at it that way, surely we can laugh at it together?"

And yet there was nothing she could do, absolutely nothing, unless the thing happened to blow over while she and Warren were out of town.

For a long time after the light was out she tried to think of a possible reason for such attention from a man. Was it going to mean an estrangement between Warren and herself? Surely not that.

(Another instalment of this story of every-day life will appear soon.)

For Sallow, Blotchy, Rough or Greasy Skins

Some skins require constant grooming to keep them from becoming oily, muddy, blotchy or rough, or if such condition has developed, to overcome it. In such chronic cases it is particularly unadvisable to keep piling on cosmetics which clog the pores, collect dust and dirt, making the complexion worse than ever. It's a far more sensible to use ordinary mercolized wax, which literally absorbs a bad complexion. Apply the wax, like cold cream, before retiring; next morning, in washing it off, you'll wash away fine, flaky particles of the unsightly cuticle. Repeat for a week or two and you'll have an entirely new skin—soft, satiny and beautiful as a child's, the once of mercolized wax, procurable at any drug store, is all you'll need.

The skin be scrubbed or flabby, here's the best possible remedy: Bite ½ pint witch hazel mixed with 2 ounces powdered saxolite and use as a daily lotion. It works like a miracle, yet is entirely harmless.

The Art of Dressing

NUMBER TWO

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DO YOU and your clothes produce the effect of an attractive picture in a suitable frame? If this is the case, you are well dressed.

The most beautiful picture in the world can be spoiled by inappropriate framing. A fine etching is overwhelmed by a heavy gilt frame; a bold oil painting loses its force and character if it is framed in a dull wood, and a dainty water color looks cheap and tawdry when a heavy gold mat surrounds it. Girls, like pictures, need suitable framing.

Don't buy the latest basque dream with a wide hip sash because your tall, slender neighbor looks well in it. If you are exactly the opposite in type you probably need exactly the opposite type of clothes from those she wears.

Don't set a high turban with a higher quill on it above your slender, oval face because the plump little blonde who sits next to you at the office wears one. It will probably make your chin look sharply pointed and give your whole face a peaked and ill-fed appearance when a flat plateau or a trim sailor would give you soft, youthful facial lines.

A girl may accent her refinement or turn her charms into cheapness and coarseness just by the way she dresses them.

If you wear immodest and exaggerated editions of the latest cuts in dress, you will not look "smart" and like a real society girl. Instead you will look common and ordinary and worth-while people will not be attracted to you.

Many French fashions are launched to satisfy the American craze for something new. Many of them are worn first by those women of the Parisian half-world" whom none of us want to resemble. Such styles will not give you any individuality or character of your own. They will only cheapen you and make you look as if you were dressed in some sort of a tiresome uniform if you insist on getting the model that "everybody is wearing." You don't want to look like every one, do you?

One Spring day I was walking down the street with a very charming Englishman, who took no interest in our American women. I asked him why?

"Just look at them," he said. "They all look as if they had been dressed by the same shop and had their clothes cut off exactly the same piece of cloth. I wouldn't pick a wife out of an institution, you know."

Girls, most men feel exactly that way about the awful sameness with which women dress. Don't be one of a group of girls who look as if they had played "follow the leader" in getting their clothes.

Your own type is worth studying. Don't cheapen it with cheaper imitations of the finely wealthy woman buy. These women can alter their style of dressing to meet every whim of fashion and every changing fad.

Your clothes ought to look as if they hugged to you as an individual—not as if you borrowed them for the occasion.

Bring out your own good points. After fashion to suit you instead of straining your whole personality to meet fashion.

Make out the first by whom the new is tried—nor yet the last to cast the old aside," says one of the great poets. Follow his advice: Wait to see whether a fashion is a fad of the day or a style that will last. Then feel at liberty to adopt only such of its points as tone with your own good points.

Remember that you want your clothes to express you. If they look cheap and common and none too neat, that is taken by people who have to judge you at a glance as a fair estimate of what you are. If you dress immodestly how is the casual observer to guess that you are modest and sweet? Don't let your clothes act as an index of all you are not and would never be. Make your garments bring out all the good points of neatness and modesty and common sense and girlish charm and good taste that you want to cultivate in yourself.

Be a charming picture in an attractive and suitable frame.

Out of Sight

"Good gracious!" exclaimed a farmer as he met a village laborer wearily pulling a loaded wheelbarrow. "It would be easier if you pushed it."

"Dare say," was the answer, "but I'm tired of the sight of it."

It seems hard to believe that one preparation would be really good for so many different uses. But these are far from being mere claims. Sylpho-Nathol has been favored by the medical profession for over a quarter of a century. It has been tried out scientifically—many times—for all the uses suggested here, and for many others. Because it is valuable for so many things, and because a few drops in water make an effective solution, it is wonderfully economical. Have you a bottle in your home?

DEFENDS LOUVAIN BURNING

By THEODOR SUTRO.

Editor of the New York German Journal.

According to the figures of the latest United States census, there are 13,313,646 foreign-born people in this country, among whom the Germans lead with 2,501,181. Ten per cent. of these live in New York.

Ask any one of these two and a half million Germans, and their sons and their daughters, their cousins, nephews and nieces, born in the United States, whether they believe the stories of the "atrocities" said to have been committed by German soldiers now in the field, as cabled by English, French and Russian so-called "war correspondents."

You might just as well ask the 1,602,990 Russians living in this country, of whom about 85 per cent. are Jewish Jews, whether they believe stories which inform the American public that the Russian Czar is the high protector and benefactor of the Jewish race.

America had better wait until the German side is heard from before they pass judgment on these alleged German "atrocities."

The other day a report was cabled telling us that the Germans had destroyed Louvain, an ancient city of Belgium. The London newspapers denounced this alleged "crime against civilization," and a great many American journals joined in the cry, without waiting to hear what the Germans had to say in answer to such a charge.

We have the German version now, as cabled by wireless. It is necessarily brief. It is that the major part of the German troops occupying Louvain had to leave in order to fight the Belgians approaching from another town. Only a battalion of the German reserves were left at Louvain. The inhabitants of Louvain, believing that the Germans were retreating, thought it a good opportunity to rise out of the small German contingent still in their town, and so they armed themselves and commenced shooting at the soldiers.

Of course, the Germans defended themselves as best they could, and, being reinforced, soon overpowered their civilian enemies and punished them severely in accordance with the usage of warfare. Houses in which these civilians were fought were burned down, civilians caught with arms in their hands were shot and the population was driven out.

Any army at war, whether English, French, Russian or American, would have done the same thing under like circumstances. This is not only permitted by international rules of warfare, but is imperative as a matter of protection.

I am here discussing the ethical side of warfare, because, as such, it has no ethical side. But when war is on and cannot be stopped, it is at least better to mitigate its horrors by holding the soldiers and civilian to generally accepted usages.

Prize fights are also brutal and demoralizing, but even they are best conducted according to the Queensberry or other well-known rules.

FORBES URGES A UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD

By B. C. FORBES.

Even the enemy befriends a man when he is maimed.

* * *

Will t whole world one day imbibe and act upon the principle that every human being is weak and frail and impotent, needing kindness and consideration and friendly aid?

* * *

Suppose you and I and every other soul alive and not yet born were completely possessed and suffused with the thought, or rule, that each member of the human family is at best but a weakling, a tiny creature of a moment, a defenceless sojourner in a strange land—would it not then be the most natural thing in the world for us to act towards ALL in the manner the bitterest of enemies, even in the heat and lust and desperation of battle, act toward wounded foes?

Why wait until our fellow mortals are wounded before extending consideration to them?

* * *

My own conviction is that out of the present awful cataclysm will come a new and worthier conception of man's relationship to his fellowman, that the gross ambitions of rulers (relics of a barbarous age) will not be allowed to sway the world and plunge the human family into fratricidal war, but that the families of one civilized nation will realize that they have all things in common with the families of every other civilized nation, and will seek to work and live in harmony with them rather than set out to murder them at the command of any individual made of the self-same clay as themselves.

* * *

What is the wastrel Czar more than you?

Or the strutting Kaiser?

Or the commonplace George V.?

Or the doddered Franz Josef?

Nothing!

* * *

Why, then, in heaven's name, should their vaulting conceits be permitted to set half the universe aflame with murderings and maimings and plunderings and rapine and hate and bloodlust?

* * *

Away with them!

* * *

Let us forever abolish the notion that millions of well-disposed men and women can fittingly be labelled "subjects" of some gilded nincompoop, mere accidents of birth to his evil, bloodthirsty bidding whenever his fancy moves him to start a murderfest for his own "glory."

* * *

Once mankind becomes impregnated with the conception that we are all subjects of compassion, that we all need friendship and love, that it is the duty of each to aid rather than slay the other, then no clever wearing a ludicrous contraption upon his head and calling himself a "king" or "czar" or "emperor" will be able to set the human family at one another's throats with all the ferocity and brutality of the forest.

In a world-society so constituted and motivated there would be no place for war.

The Cost of Kings

Add to the Recognized Expense of Maintaining Useless Royalty the Fearful Cost in Blood and Treasure of This Needless War

The war in horrifying progress in Europe is, in reality, that most dreadful of all wars—a civil war.

It is a war between states which should be living in peace and amity, in co-operative effort, in intellectual and material progress, and even in governmental accord, as "The United States of Europe."

It is a war betwen a large proportion of the civilized nations of the world in which human progress will be halted and civilization itself threatened.

It is a war in which the proportion of civilized human beings on the planet will be greatly reduced, and the contribution to human progress of those innumerable units irretrievably lost.

It is a war in which the accumulated treasures of centuries are being destroyed, treasures not merely of money but of art and architecture which can never be replaced, and whose refining and elevating and civilizing influence will forever be ended in the world.

The disaster of this war, therefore, is not merely a local disaster. It is a worldwide disaster. It is a disaster to the civilization of which we Americans are a part. It is a destruction of the heritage of civilization of which we Americans are part possessors.

It means a diminution of the number, and a weakening of the power in the world of the white nations—of the Occidental nations of which we are one.

It means an assault upon the standards, the ideals, the conditions of life which have been the contribution of those Occidental nations to the civilization of the world—which indeed have constituted the civilization of the modern world.

It means a corresponding strengthening of Oriental aims, ideals and ambitions. It tends to make possible an eventful triumph of ideals and conditions wholly foreign and offensive to our own.

One nation allied with Orientals is actually importing Orientals onto the scene of this conflict to show them how they may meet and possibly defeat Occidentals in modern warfare—a lesson which will be readily learned and ever remembered.

Another nation is as recklessly destroying priceless heirlooms of art and architecture to penalize a prostrate foe, without consideration of the inestimable loss it is inflicting upon the whole civilized community of which its own people are a notable part.

No one nation is to be blamed more than another for these illimitable dangers and disasters, but all are to be condemned for having invited and instituted so cruel and fearful a conflict. In the judgment of posterity surely all will be held responsible for the infinite injury of this war, recklessly and unreasonably inflicted upon humanity and upon human progress.

But, while the nations engaged in this internecine struggle will be and must justly be held responsible for the endless and needless disaster incurred, the people themselves of the several nations can hardly be held accountable.

The war is indeed convincing and distressing proof that the veneer of civilization lies but thinly upon all so-called civilized beings, that civilization herself sits but insecurely upon her throne, liable at any time to rude displacement by original savagery.

Yet the people themselves, under strictly modern forms of government, would probably never have become involved in this war.

The war is attributable to the survival in Europe of mediaeval institutions long outgrown by modern society, to the prosecution of imperial policies in the selfish interest of greedy hereditary dynasties.

It is a war of the Middle Ages, caused by those conditions of the Middle Ages, monarchic and aristocratic, which still persist in Europe and which as long as they persist will repress popular development and dominate popular sentiment.

This is a war of kings, brought on by the assassination of a king's nephew, who is of no more actual importance to modern society than the nephew of any other individual, citizen or subject, in all Europe.

Born of mediaeval misconception of the importance of royalty, this war has speedily become a war of inherited mediaeval traditions, of imperial greed and glory.

But the glory of war is fading fast. The people of the world are no longer children who delight in destruction and exalt the destroyers.

In the histories of more enlightened ages, the rulers responsible for this war will not be described as heroes, but as homicidal maniacs, as traitors to the sacred trust solemnly imposed upon them to promote the happiness and protect the lives of their people.

There is no glory in murder and robbery, and war is but organized, authorized piracy and manslaughter.

No country points with pride to a citizen who shoots down another in the heat of hatred or in the passion of jealousy.

No country exalts as a hero the man who holds up another at the muzzle of a gun and takes his watch and pocketbook from him as "indemnity."

No country applauds and approves the man who hides in the night and from mean motives of revenge destroys a tenement with a bomb, killing and maiming innocent women and children.

In modern society, men such as these are regarded as criminals and punished for their crimes by imprisonment or execution.

A crime is not modified by its magnitude.

If a man who shoots another is a murderer, the rulers who cause the shooting of a million men are a million times more guilty murderers.

If a man who robs another of a few dollars by force of arms is a thief, the rulers who rob cities and nations of millions in money by force of arms are exactly that much greater thieves.

If the man who destroys a tenement and endangers the lives therein is a criminal, the rulers who wantonly destroy cities, the priceless treasures of cities, and the lives of unoffending citizens to satisfy a savage revenge, are a thousand times greater criminals.

If the small criminal is to be punished by imprisonment or execution, then surely the fitting place for the greater criminal is not a palace or a throne, but a prison cell or a scaffold.

Is this anarchy?

No, it is abstract justice, seldom seen, and therefore seldom recognized.

We all deplore anarchy. Then let us deplore the things which make for anarchy.

We all denounce the anarchist who kills a king. Then let us equally denounce the royal anarchists who in cold blood and in snug safety murder a million fellow men entrusted to their protecting care.

Time will be when society will include nations within its organization, when united navies will patrol the seas in the interest of peace, and united armies will police the land.

Then any ruler who disturbs the peace will be arrested and jailed, and any king "By the Grace of God" who commits, inspires or instigates murder will be duly and properly hanged.

Heaven speed that happy day!

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

How the People of Boston Are Losing $10,000 a Month

An Instance of Mayor Curley's Economy

After the humiliating failure of Mayor Curley to palm off on the city of Boston a contract with the Electric Light Company, by which that prosperous company would be permitted to extort from the people of Boston a million dollars more than was a fair price for supplying electric light to the city, the AMERICAN hoped that Mr. Curley would learn a lesson.

This newspaper wishes Mr. Curley to be a good Mayor for the sake of the city.

Sometimes men who will not be good of their own accord find from experience that honesty is the best policy. We had hoped that the Mayor would learn from the fate of his electric lighting scheme that the people of Boston and our City Council were not to be humbugged or lulled into the sleep of confidence by the Mayor's pretensions of economy or by his strange and unnatural union with John A. Sullivan.

We had hoped that, having failed to profit from being wrong, he would try the policy of being right for awhile. Therefore, this newspaper urged him to carry out the recommendation of the City Council that notice be given of the city's intention to rescind the present extortionate contract with the Electric Lighting Company.

Under the present contract, the city is obliged to give one year's notice, but the hope of the Mayor's immediate reform appears to be vain.

He refuses to rescind this bad contract upon the pretense that he intends to enter into further negotiations with the Electric Light Company. No more miserable pretext could be invented for misconduct than this excuse. No harm can possibly come from a notice which would save our rights. He should have given this notice six months ago, so that no time would be lost in negotiating with the company for a reformation of the present contract. He did not give this notice, and now six months have been lost. If he gives the notice now, as the City Council urges him to do, he can then carry on such negotiations as he alleges he has in mind without losing any MORE of the city's rights under the present contract. But if, without giving the notice, he proceeds to further negotiations and those negotiations fail, as the proposed contract which the Mayor attempted to foist on the city has just failed, then the city will have lost another valuable period.

During all this time the city is losing $10,000 a month in extortionate rates.

But this is not the end of the Mayor's nonfeasance. The present contract of the Electric Lighting Company provides that the city may at any time demand of the company a statement of its cost of producing electric light and, if it is not satisfied with that statement, the city may proceed to have the cost of producing electric light arbitrated. If the arbitrators find that this cost has decreased since the electric lighting contract was signed six years ago, then the Electric Lighting Company must reduce its charges by two-thirds of the amount found to be the decrease in the cost of manufacturing the electric light.

Councillor Coulthurst introduced an order, which the City Council passed, making a demand upon the Electric Lighting Company for a statement of its present cost of manufacturing in order that the first step may be taken to reduce the charges to the city under the present contract. THIS ORDER WAS PASSED MORE THAN A MONTH AGO AND THE MAYOR HAS NOT ACTED ON IT YET. But the extortion from the people of Boston goes on at the rate of $10,000 a month.

However, this newspaper will not despair of its effort to make Mr. Curley as good a Mayor as it is possible for him to be, during the time which he has yet to remain in office.

Making of a Husband

Woman Can Either Hustle Man Along the Wrong Road if He's on the Down Grade, or Else Boost Him Up the Ladder if He's Already Climbing It

By DOROTHY DIX

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company

I AM not one of those who believes greatly in woman's influence. To my mind the most overworked fiction on earth is the fairy story about man being guided and ruined in every act in life by the power of some woman, in whose hands he is as clay in the hands of the potter.

It is a lovely theory that pleases the vanity of women, and therefore they have accepted it with enthusiasm. Millions of credulous girls who believed it have married drunkards and rakes and gamblers in the fond expectation that they would be able to work miracles and turn their husbands into models of all the virtues, but only too late they found out they had put their faith in a fake cure, and that as a reformatory agent a wife's influence wasn't worth a hill of beans.

In reality the most that a woman can do for a man is to be a kind of an accelerator. She can either hustle him down the wrong road, if he is on the down grade, or else she can boost him up the ladder if he is already climbing it, but she cannot scotch him, either way.

Cannot Supply Backbone

She cannot supply the industry and grit and backbone that he lacks if he is a loafer, and she wastes herself in trying to make good for his deficiencies. By the same token, if a man has in him the qualities that make for success, he will go on to success in spite of his wife.

The woman, however, who is married to a man of even ordinary ability can raise that ability to its highest power. She can be an inspiration to success and help her husband on to it if she wishes to.

She can help him to do big things by keeping alive his faith in himself. There are women who are always like a fluttering flag of glory before a man, thrilling him with ambition and with that belief in his power to achieve that is the very foundation of effort. There comes a time to every man when the battle seems going against him and when further effort appears useless and hopeless and he is tempted to give up.

At that moment his fate rests in his wife's hands. If she tells him that luck is against him and that he lacks the ability that other men have to get along, his doom is sealed. But if her faith in him never falters, if she makes him feel that he will triumph over every obstacle, she breathes into him the hope and courage that moves mountains.

A wife can help a man by taking an interest in his business. Women's foolish jealousy of their husbands' occupations is at the bottom of nine-tenths of the bankruptcies. A wife who affects to despise the business that supports her, who looks bored when her husband talks shop, is a millstone about a man's neck.

It is the man who takes his business home with him, and whose wife enthusiastically thrashes out every detail of it with him who succeeds.

She Can Help or Hinder

For, no matter how little a woman knows practically about a business, she has flashes of intuition that are genius. Also, in discussing any subject with a sympathetic listener, it clarifies the matter in your own mind and opens up vistas that you had never thought of before.

A wife can help a husband by making friends for him, or she can hinder him by making enemies. She can keep him selfishly tied to her apron string, or she can send him out among the men who can help him along. Too much domesticity is just as bad for a man as too little.

Above all, a woman can help her husband by keeping him physically fit. The woman who does not keep her home comfortable and a haven of peace, in which jaded nerves can be soothed and rested and repaired, is putting a spoke in her own wheel of fortune. It is strange how little women realize that home is the power house in which the dynamic energy of a man must be manufactured.

A man's physical well being lies in his wife's hands. She can build him up with proper food or she can slay him with bad cooking. She can exhaust his strength on foolish household tasks, or she can save his strength for his business.

All Rests with the Wife

Many a man who might have been a merchant prince has had his nerves wrecked and his brain paralyzed by a bad breakfast. Many a poem and novel that would have made a man famous have been withered, root and branch, in the brain of a genius by the harassment of a shrewish wife.

It is an interesting game and a profitable one, this helping to make a man. I recommend it as a pastime to the discontented married ladies who are wishing that they had something worth while to do.

DO YOU KNOW THAT—

There is more passenger traffic in and out of the South Terminal Station than any other railway station in the world enjoys?

TO A DYSPEPTIC

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

I KNOW your life seems stale and flat;
You can't eat this or much of that;
You can't eat pork, you can't eat veal,
And have to breakfast on corn meal;
I know you cannot sip rare wine
Or anything along that line;
But—
How would you like to be a fish,
Afraid to taste of any dish?

Consider well the speckled trout
That wakes each morn and swims about,
Looking for some nutritious bit
Without a hook inside of it.
The trout's afraid of every worm,
Howe'er invitingly they squirm.
The trout's afraid of every fly—
The caster may be lurking by.
You think that Fate was harsh and rude
Because you can't eat certain food,
But—
How would you like to be a fish,
Afraid to tackle any dish?

DOES HE WIN HIS HEART'S DESIRE?

That is what the admirers of Algernon Knox want to know.

Algernon Knox is the finest character E. Phillips Oppenheim has ever created.

Except, perhaps, you may say Miss de Hagon.

And Miss de Hagon is Algernon Knox's "heart's desire."
